McNutt Acts to Freeze Workers in War Jobs In D.C., 31 Other Areas

12 Regional Officers Instructed to Set Up Hiring Controls in Labor Shortage Spots

By Ben W. Gilbert
Post Staff Writer

Plans to freeze workers in essential jobs in Washington moved ahead yesterday as Chairman Paul V. McNutt of the War Manpower Commission directed his 12 regional officers to set up hiring controls in the District and 31 other designated labor shortage areas "as soon as practicable."

John Foy, acting WMC regional director of the Washington regional office covering the District, Maryland, Virginia and North Carolina, said a management-labor policy committee for the District would be set up within the next week or 10 days to carry out McNutt's new order.

A stabilization program will be devised for the District in consultation with the labor-management committee, Foy said.

Government workers, including those at the Navy Yard, and workers in private industry engaged in essential work in the District would be made subject to hiring controls as soon as the program is devised, Foy said.

Virtual Job Freeze

Hiring practices indorsed by McNutt in a policy statement for incorporation in such local "stabilization" agreements included arrangements for a virtual job "freeze" which would prevent workers from moving from essential to nonessential activities, and permit movement from job to job only of workers carrying releases from their employers or from a designated representative of the War Manpower Commission.

McNutt said the Civil Service Commission would act as the "employer" of all Government workers living in labor shortage areas.

"Hiring by departments and agencies of the Federal Government which are subject to the rules and regulations of the United States Civil Service Commission shall be made only with the approval of the commission which shall conduct its recruiting activities and make referrals in accordance with applicable War Manpower Commission policies, procedures, and standards," McNutt's policy said.

Releases Required

A WMC spokesman said the new order would control movement of Government workers within the Government in accordance with the present governmental "priority" system, movement from private industry into the Government, and movement out of the Government into private industry.

Once the program is set up, releases would be required for all such job transfers, it was said.

Between 60 and 90 additional areas are slated to be added to the hiring control list shortly, it was learned.

McNutt said the policy directive —a pattern for employment sta-

Servants' Wages Tax Headache For Housewives

By the Associated Press

Because of lowered income tax exemptions, many housewives who employ domestic servants may become acquainted for the first time this year with the Government's annual information return.

Treasury officials said yesterday that householders who paid more than $500 last year to a domestic servant, if the servant was single, or $1200 if married, must report such payments on the "annual information return" to the Internal Revenue Bureau by February 15.

Willful failure to file a return is punishable by $10,000 fine or a year in jail or both.

It makes no difference, Treasury officials said, whether Mrs. Housewife paid her maid by the hour, day, week or month. If total payments during the year exceeded the personal exemptions allowed in the income tax law, then the payments must be reported.

For those who have servants "living in," the value of living quarters or meals furnished in lieu of cash compensation must be reported.

Slag Blast Hurts 22 in Baltimore

Baltimore, Feb. 4 (AP).—Fifteen tons of slag exploded at the Rustless Iron & Steel Co. today, injuring 22 persons, most of them only slightly.

The slag, waste material from the giant blast furnaces, exploded when it was dumped from a big crane. The blast, heard throughout northeast Baltimore, shattered windows in nearby buildings.

To Supplant Temporary Law

Mead Offers Overtime Bill To Raise Federal Pay 15 to 30%

The new Federal overtime pay bill was introduced yesterday by Senator Mead (Democrat) of New York, and legislative machinery is scheduled to begin moving on the measure within the next few days at conferences between Mead and Senator Downey (Democrat) of California, chairman of the Senate Civil Service Committee.

The conferences will plot the course of action the committee will follow in handling the bill, and will probably result in the naming of a subcommittee to hold immediate hearings.

Mead's bill follows in almost every detail the plan he outlined last week after a meeting with United States personnel chiefs and Chairman Ramspeck (Democrat) of Georgia of the House Civil Service Committee.

It would provide full time-and-a-half compensation for each hour over 40 that Federal classified employes work in a week. Workers whose hours of duty are intermittent and unadaptable to overtime, including legislative and judicial employes, would get a flat 15 per cent raise.

Neither overtime nor flat raise could be figured on any amount greater than the $2900 portion of an employe's salary, but a provision in the current temporary law limiting the total of base pay plus raise or overtime to $5000 has been eliminated.

The overtime compensation will have the effect of adding 30 per cent to the November paycheck of an employe on a 48-hour week, and of adding 15 per cent to that of a 44-hour worker. The increases granted by the present temporary bill were about 21 and 10 per cent, respectively, over November, while nonovertime workers got 10 per cent.

The bill specifically exempts from the increase elected officials, judges, heads of departments and agencies, officers and employes in the Postoffice Department field service, employes whose wages are fixed on a daily or hourly basis by wage boards, and employes outside the continental limits of the United States.

Retained in substance is a section of the temporary law which requires all agency heads to justify the number of their employes to the Bureau of the Budget. The re-

By 39-28 Vote

The Senate yesterday called a halt to an effort by one of its standing committees to put war production control definitely in civilian hands and left unanswered charges that the action was dictated by the Army and Navy.

By a 39 to 28 record vote, the Senate discharged its Education and Labor Committee from further consideration of a bill to mobilize war production agencies under one-man civilian domination and referred the measure to its Military Affairs Committee whose ties with the military have been cemented in years of association with Army leaders.

There were signs that the decision would find favor in the Administration inasmuch as Majority Leader Barkley of Kentucky, cast his vote with the military committee. On the roll call, Barkley had the support of Minority Leader McNary of Oregon and 17 other Republicans.

Backed by Nine

The bill was introduced in the Senate with the direct backing of nine Senators, representatives of three political parties, who were its sponsors. In the last Congress the Education and Labor Committees conducted lengthy hearings on the measure and from 32 witnesses compiled 1400 pages of testimony which, pointedly observed the committee chairman, Senator Thomas (Democrat) of Utah, most Senators have not read.

Without question, the objectives of the measure—civilian responsibility for war production under a single administrator—had the support of a large number of Senators

Chairmen Clash

War Production Chief Donald M. Nelson disclosed yesterday that he had ordered the powers of Production Vice Chairman Charles E. Wilson increased at the expense of Program Vice Chairman Ferdinand Eberstadt after a "difference of opinion" between the two vice chairmen over a production order issued by Wilson.

As a result of the transfer of powers, Wilson will take over the following divisions of WPB which have been under Eberstadt's control:

Aluminum-magnesium, automotive, general industrial equipment, safety and technical equipment, facilities bureau, and tools.

Given Jurisdiction

The shift gives Wilson complete jurisdiction over most WPB divisions handling the critical production components whose production Wilson is seeking to expand. He already had jurisdiction over radio and radar (detection devices), aircraft production and shipbuilding.

Eberstadt retains control over all other WPB industry divisions—a group of about 30 which deal primarily with raw materials. Those now under Wilson's control deal primarily with end products.

The clash occurred over an order from Wilson to war contractors directing them to place orders for critical components needed in the first six months of this year by tomorrow. Orders for the second half of the year were to be placed by March 1.

Eberstadt objected to the order on the ground that it placed too great a burden on industry and conflicted with instructions sent under his controlled materials

Bomb Attack on D. C. Forecast, With Nazis Using Poison Gas

Post Staff Writer

Numerous Washington citizens heard Lieut. Col. Harold Evans Hartley, aerial warfare student, issue a warning that an attempt will be made to bomb Washington from "secret auxiliary bases down South" at a meeting last night in the United States Chamber of Commerce Auditorium designed to spur a lagging recruiting drive for civilian defense.

Few of a large group of citizens, active from the first in recruitment for civilian defense, heard the warning, however, because only at the last minute and after sharp protest were members of the civilian defense committees of the 66 areas invited to attend.

Leonard Tucker, chairman of the Friendship area and chairman of the Civilian Defense Council representing most of the 66 areas, called the omission of the civilian defense committees from consideration the "grossest kind of insult which has done irreparable damage to the whole civilian defense structure here." He announced he was calling an emergency meeting of his executive committee today to consider what steps should be taken.

Tucker revealed that after learning accidentally of the meeting, he had written Col. Lemuel Bolles who called it, a sharp letter of protest which resulted in belated

Ruml Sights 50 Billion Rise In U.S. Income

Makes Prediction Defending Tax Plan For Five Hours at Committee Hearing

By Edward Ryan
Post Staff Writer

A picture of postwar America in which national income might jump to 180 billion dollars within a generation was outlined yesterday by Beardsley Ruml, New York economist and banker, as a major reason why his plan for erasing a one-year tax debt for millions of citizens would spell better business and more cash revenue for their Government.

Treasury estimates place last year's income around 115 billion, and that for 1943 at between 130 and 135 billion, which would mean an approximate increase of 50 billions.

Ruml, on his feet for all of a five-hour hearing before the House Ways and Means Committee, took sharp issue with Treasury proposals to "double up tax liabilities in shifting to a pay-as-you-go system of income tax collections, and denied the Treasury contention that his plan would mean an immediate 10-billion-dollar loss of Federal assets.

The husky jovial New Yorker, who is chairman of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York and treasurer of R. H. Macy & Co., received a warm personal welcome from committee members, but ran into a barrage of critical questions.

Compromise Seen

In the windup of the session, Chairman Doughton (Democrat) of North Carolina pointed out that no single individual could be expected to write the best possible tax plan. There were other strong indications that the committee would reject, alike, the all-out Ruml plan and the complete Treasury recommendations, and seek a compromise on the amount of taxes that might be forgiven, and the amount doubled up in switching to a pay-as-you-earn collection system.

Most of the committee appeared sold on pay-as-you-go collections, to be withheld at the source where possible. Still wide open was the question of how much of 1942 tax liabilities might be cancelled in going over to the new system. Ruml's proposal would write off an estimated 10 billion dollars in tax debts on 1942 income, a compromise by Representative Robertson (Democrat) of Virginia would scale this down to seven or eight billion, and a third plan, believed to have the best prospect of Treasury backing would reduce the figure to three or four billion.

Under the last plan, the 1941 rate would be applied to 1942 income in shifting to pay-as-you-go collections. Citizens who began owing income taxes for the first time as a result of last year's new increase in rates and reductions in exemptions would still start paying the taxes they expect this year, but the payments would go to settle 1943 tax debts—not their 1942 tax debt as under present law.

Old taxpayers would be given an average relief estimated at 10 per cent of their income tax as now calculated for 1942; and they would pay the remaining 90 per cent in installments over three years—on top of a proposed 20 per cent in-

Details Lacking

By John G. Norris

"Recurrent engagements between American and Japanese air and naval forces continue in the Solomons, the Navy reported last night, as United States troops ashore on Guadalcanal made new gains.

Stepped-up enemy air raids on our Guadalcanal air base—the key to the whole fight—and apparent new attempts by the Japs to supply their weakened forces on the island, were also revealed. No details were given.

Naval officials said the general situation in the area was unchanged from the day before, with numerous task forces still sparring for position and air and light surface units clashing from time to time.

Fleets Await Opportunity

Powerful opposing fleets are in the South Pacific area waiting a favorable opportunity to come to grips. Should the heavy sluggers get into action, a showdown struggle would follow, officials say.

(A Japanese radio broadcast picked up in London asserted that 10 American battleships, 10 aircraft carriers and 20 cruisers were engaging the Japanese fleet. The Navy had no comment to make on the report but naval sources emphasized that the figures cited by the Japanese radio was "absurd.")

Military authorities here believe the opening round of the new Japanese attempt to regain control of the entire Solomons arc will soon end. It will be followed, they declared, either by a meeting of the opposing main forces—in perhaps the biggest sea battle of the war—or a Japanese withdrawal of their naval forces and temporary abandonment of their attempt to drive us from the Solomons.

Losses By Both Sides

What has been going on for the past week, they say, is a series of attacks and maneuvers by both sides calculated to draw the enemy into battle contact on terms favorable to their side. In other words, this means within range of their own shore-based aircraft.

The fighting to date—sharp though scattered over a wide area—has resulted in losses to both sides, the Navy stated. No indication has been given as to what these may be, although a naval spokesman declared that Jap claims of having sunk two United States battleships and three cruisers were "grossly exaggerated."

Last night's Navy communique telling of activity ashore on Guadalcanal and some of the air action in the area, had this to say

MAY FORESTALL NAZI DUNKERQUE—The Berlin radio said last night that Soviet commandos have gained a foothold on the Taman Peninsula (1) leading to the Kerch Strait and that Russian troops were attacking Novorossisk. That Black Sea naval base is one possible escape alley for Germans below Rostov. Meanwhile the Russians announced cutting in several places of German-held railroads carrying vital supplies to hard-pressed Nazi armies, including the Tikhoretsk-Sea of Azov, cut near Krasnodar (2), Rostov-Tikhoretsk, cut below Rostov (3), Kharkov-Rostov, cut at Krasny Liman (4), and Moscow-Crimea, cut above Kursk (5). Vengeance

By the Associated Press

London (Friday), Feb. 5.—The Red army has cut off German troops in the Caucasus from Rostov by two swift smashes toward the Sea of Azov, Moscow announced early today, while Berlin broadcast that Soviet commandos had landed on Taman Peninsula leading to Kerch Strait and were attacking the sorely beset Germans from the rear.

While the midnight communique recorded here by the Soviet monitor failed to mention any landing on Taman, the Nazis said that Soviet troops had reached shore at three points under the protection of the Red Black Sea fleet's guns. Berlin asserted that two landings were repulsed, but that the third force gained a beachhead—a position, which if held, would, in conjunction with the upper Caucasus drives, bottle up perhaps 200,000 men and forestall a German Dunkerque.

The Soviet midnight communique also said that Red troops had broken through the first line of powerful German fortifications rimming Rostov.

44,000 of Foe Knocked Out

A special war bulletin a few hours earlier announced that the Red army had killed or captured 44,000 encircled Axis troops in a week-old continuing battle of annihilation west of Voronezh and had swept on to reach positions on three sides of Kursk, big Nazi 1941-42 offensive base above the Ukraine in southern Russia.

Using the same encirclement and breakthrough tactics employed by the Nazis to slash the French and Allied armies in Flanders in 1940, the Russians sent two spearhead columns overrunning Starominskaya and Kanevskaya in the western Caucasus. These towns, 32 miles apart, are both only 38 miles from the Sea of Azov.

Their seizure effectively split the Germans based in the Novorossisk-Krasnodar areas of the Caucasus from the Nazi pivot base of Rostov to the north. All main escape roads and railways leading to Rostov from the south now are in Russian hands.

[These developments, providing the Berlin news is borne out, left the Germans only one method of escape from the Caucasus—by sea. Since the Red fleet is the most

Allied Headquarters in North Africa, Feb. 4.—Gen. Henri Honore Giraud today freed 27 Communist deputies who had been under arrest since 1940, and the Allied Commission on Political Prisoners announced that 903 political prisoners had been liberated since the Allied landings.

"There are still 5500 political prisoners in custody, most of whom are Spanish Republicans whose cases are under investigation," an official spokesman said. All are of foreign nationality.

Among the Communist deputies released was Henri Martel, who was imprisoned before the fall of France on charges of spreading antiwar propaganda in factories.

All the Communists released had been sent from France to North Africa as prisoners. Most were arrested by the Vichy regime when France fell, but a few had been in prison before that.

Giraud recently told a press conference there would be no political prejudice against any man—Communist, Jew or Free Mason—if he

U. S. Bombers Raid Reich For 2d Time

5 Fortresses Lost In Attack; R. A. F. Blasts Nazi Targets

By Howard Berry
International News Service Staff Writer

London, Feb. 4.—American Flying Fortresses carried out their second raid of the war on Germany proper today with a daylight attack against strategic targets in the northwestern Reich.

Five of the big bombers were lost in the attack, executed while R. A. F. squadrons were following up their devastating night raid on the submarine manufacturing center of Hamburg with sweeps over France and Belgium.

One veteran American pilot was quoted as saying that more enemy fighters attacked the Fortresses than on any of his previous raids. A "number" of enemy fighters were shot down, it was announced.

An American communique stated that "very bad" cloud conditions prevented accurate observation of results in the Fortress raid.

Strong formations of Nazi fighters harried the American planes "from the moment they sighted Germany until they were far at sea on the return trip," the communique said.

Targets Unidentified

The statement, which did not identify the target cities, added that "a number" of enemy fighters were destroyed.

The Berlin radio broadcast claimed that bombs were dropped at random along the coastal area. It said seven of the raiding planes were downed.

Davies Sees Possibility Hitler May Be Dead

New York, Feb. 4 (INS).—The possibility that Adolf Hitler is dead was raised tonight by Joseph Davies, former United States Ambassador to Russia. In a Nation-wide radio address, Davies said:

"These days of mourning and grief in Germany, supposedly because of the Stalingrad defeat, and the fact that Hitler did not make his tenth anniversary speech last week, suggests the possibility that Hitler is dead.

Davies, who spoke on the N. B. C., "March of Time" program added, however, that even if Hitler is dead, "the Nazi party with its industrial Fascists and military leaders is still alive." . . . "Even though Hitler were dead, the desperation of the German people fed by Goebbels' propaganda on the horror of a United Nations victory will sustain the German war machine."

"Close to Bedrock"

Meat Ration Under 2 Pounds A Week Predicted on April 1

(Fourth of food to be purchased by Government this year. Page 8.)

Rationing of meats is expected to begin about April 1 with a "close to bedrock" allotment less than two pounds a person a week, instead of the two and a half pounds originally expected, it was learned yesterday.

Meat rationing will include all the so-called "red" meats including beef, lamb and pork, but will not include poultry and fish under present plans, it was learned. Cheese may be rationed along with the "red" meats, however.

It is understood that the Office of Civilian Supply has estimated bare minimum essential meat needs at two pounds a person a week, including meat, poultry and fish. Under present expectations, the basic allotment will exceed two pounds a person only by the amounts of poultry and fish available.

The suggested minimum of 104 pounds a year for American consumers compares with present British consumption of about 101 pounds per person annually.

It is understood that OCS calculated "bedrock" meat, fish and poultry requirements by raising the minimum figure suggested by the Department of Agriculture's Bureau of Home Economics by 20 pounds a person a year, and by cutting by almost 150 pounds the bureau's estimates of minimum essential milk requirements.

OCS, which possesses only advisory authority, was reported to believe that the American diet would be improved by greater emphasis on meats, even at the expense of dairy products—a switch-over that could be accomplished by changing food-production goals.

Start of meat rationing was expected to be preceded by the placing of controls on restaurants, with commercial eating places asked to cut their consumption about 20 per cent to get down to the level of home consumers of meat. Up to now, restaurants have been allowed to buy all the meat they can secure, with the only limitation being in effect on the slaughterhouse level of marketing.

Rationing of meat is expected to follow by a month rationing of canned, dried, and frozen foods which is now scheduled to go into effect on March 1.

After meat rationing starts, the Government may be expected to ask consumers to step up their consumption of bread, cereals, beans, peas and nuts to secure their protein supply from other foods than meat.

It is understood that OCS is also in favor of substituting whole wheat for white flour and further enriching bread to make it a better meat substitute.

Finnish Peace Move Rumored As Schoenfeld Sees Roosevelt

By Hugo Speck
International News Service Staff Writer

The prospect that Finland may soon agree to a separate peace was being discussed in informed diplomatic circles here last night.

If such negotiations have not already begun it is considered in authoritative quarters that preliminary behind-the-scenes conversations are now taking place to remove the beleaguered, starving little country from the conflict.

Reports from abroad regarding Finland's position and events in the Capital yesterday, these circles state, may point towards a Finnish move to withdraw from the war under the best terms which can now be obtained.

In answer to questions regarding the Finnish situation, Secretary of State Hull declared yesterday that he had nothing to say at the moment. But not to be overlooked in the developments was the fact that the United States minister to Finland H. F. Arthur Schoenfeld, who is now in Washington, was received by the President yesterday.

At the same time Finnish Minister Hjalmar J. Procope called on Undersecretary of State Sumner Welles yesterday afternoon.

After this conference Minister Procope denied any knowledge that his country is ready to seek a separate peace and told reporters that he merely called on Welles to in-

The Berlin radio displayed a perplexed but continuing interest yesterday and last night in the movements of British Prime Minister Churchill.

One broadcast during the day recorded by the Associated Press quoted a dispatch datelined Stockholm saying Churchill had made a "hasty visit to Moscow" following last weekend's conference with Turkish leaders in Turkey.

Then last night the same radio broadcast a dispatch datelined Maspf saying that the Prime Minister was in Gabraltar en route back to London.

Jap Planes Attack U. S. Ships at Night In Solomons Area

With the United States Fleet in the South Pacific, Feb. 2 (delayed) (AP).—A night bombing attack by Japanese aircraft against American warships, the first such foray of the war, was carried out Friday night, January 29, in the Solomon Islands area.

Targets of the attack were naval units engaged in covering operations at Guadalcanal. Results were not disclosed.

Roaring from the skies after dusk, the enemy planes struck at a unit of the southwest Pacific which was cruising near Guadalcanal. In the night battle off Savo Island last August 9, fleet officials recalled, Japanese planes dropped flares but no bombs. In that engagement three American cruisers were sunk.

American dive bombers made night attacks in the battle of Midway, in which a Japanese armada was vanquished, and there was the possibility the enemy was copying those tactics in the raid last Friday night.

Reich itself was executed Wednesday, January 27, on the naval base of Wilhelmshaven and on industrial Emden. In that raid, 22 Nazi fighters were shot down against a loss of 3 American planes.

(A British radio broadcast heard in New York by C. B. S. reported the big American bombers flew unescorted over Germany today.)

Meanwhile, R. A. F. planes droned out over the English Channel in the direction of northern France and Belgium in a continuous stream under brilliant weather conditions. British fighters swept the old World War battlefield at Ypres in Belgium and battered St. Omer in France, destroying one Focke-Wulf 190 and damaging two others. No R. A. F. planes were missing after these assaults, it was announced.

The daylight sweeps followed the second furious, concentrated night assault in five days on Hamburg by a heavy force of R. A. F. bombers. Sixteen planes were reported missing after the shattering attack, indicating that 300 or more aircraft participated in the raid.

Large fires visible for 60 miles were left burning in the city, which in peacetime has a population of some 1,700,000 and which produces more U-boats than any other German metropolis.

It was the ninety-fifth raid of the war on Germany's greatest port, which was attacked last Saturday night.

An Air Ministry announcement revealed that R. A. F. pilots who raided Hamburg braved exceptionally severe weather conditions, including temperatures of 40 degrees below zero. Ice formed on both the inside and outside of the high-flying bombers, which also fought their way through raging electrical storms.

Returning pilots reported "very heavy explosions" were visible among fires kindled at the port.

Italian General Reported Captured; Land Action Lulls

By the Associated Press

London, Feb. 4.—New successes in the Allied campaign of attrition against Axis sea communications—the destruction of 14 and perhaps 16 Axis ships in the Mediterranean by submarine and bomber action over a period of several days—were announced today as land action in Tunisia again fell into a lull.

In what the Allied headquarters communique described as "a limited success," the British in a local attack seized a height 6 miles south of Bou Arada, in the central mountainous area of Tunisia, and threw back a German counter-attack. A checkover of prisoners taken by the Americans in earlier actions disclosed that an Italian brigadier general was among them.

Montgomery Going Slowly

At the eastern end of the line, the British Eighth Army pursuing Marshal Rommel westward from Libya reported only patrol activity against his rearguard. The bulk of Gen. Sir Bernard L. Montgomery's British forces was at, or very near, the Tunisian frontier, with some advanced elements operating well within Tunisia.

The relatively slow progress of Montgomery's advance since he overran Tripoli suggested to military observers that he was gathering ample supplies and resting his troops to insure a smash through the Mareth line in a minimum of time.

Allied air action was reported heavy from Tunisia to Sicily and Italy, and the day's official reports showed eight Allied planes lost in the Tunisian theater to six for the Axis.

Gabes Airdrome Attacked

Allied objectives at the Tunisian end included enemy troops and the Gabes airdrome; the twelfth U. S. Air Force based on Cairo attacked the major Axis bases of Palermo and Messina on Sicily. The results at Palermo were obscured by a heavy cloud cover; at Messina bombs burst in the dry-dock worshop area, about the railroad ferry terminal and the port power station.

Of the 14 Axis ships reported sunk in the Mediterranean, four went down under bomber attack and 10 under submarine assault. Two others were known to have been hit and were believed sunk.

Roosevelt Hails Victory In Stalin Note

President Roosevelt yesterday sent a congratulatory message to Joseph Stalin, stating that "the brilliant victory" at Stalingrad will inspire fresh determination to force the "unconditional surrender of the common enemy."

The text of the message which was released by the White House follows:

"As Commander in Chief of the armed forces of the United States of America, I congratulate you on the brilliant victory at Stalingrad of the armies under your supreme command. The 162 days of epic battle for the city which forever honored your name and the decisive result which all Americans are celebrating today will remain one of the proudest chapters in this war of the peoples united against Nazism and its emulators.

"The commanders and fighters of your armies at the front and the men and women who have supported them in factory and field have combined not only to cover with glory their country's arms, but to inspire by their example fresh determination among all the United Nations to bend every energy to bring about the final defeat and unconditional surrender of the common enemy."

In the past the Russians have been loath to announce a tactical move until it had achieved a certain amount of success. Thus the apparent reticence by Moscow.—Editor's note.)

These huge new Axis reverses came only two days after the final slaughter or capture of 330,000 German, Rumanian and Croat troops at Stalingrad.

The breakthrough of Rostov's own perimeter of fortifications was announced thus by the communique:

"South of Rostov-on-the-Don our troops continued a successful offensive. On one of the lines northwest of Mechetinskaya (apparently in the Kagalnitskaya area, 30 miles below Rostov) the enemy set up a powerful defense line.

"The Germans had built numerblockhouses and trenches and had set up barbed wire entanglements and had densely mined the approaches.

"A powerful blow by Soviet artillery, tank, infantry and calvary forces broke through the defenses and penetrated into the enemy's positions. They occupied several strongly fortified populated places. The Germans retreated, leaving hundreds of dead and large quantities of smashed war material. Our troops captured trophies and took prisoners."

Axis Toll Increased

Oh the Voronezh front the Russians, in announcing the killing or capture of 44,000 more Germans since January 27 boosted the total Axis casualties to more than 100,000 on that front alone.

The Russians now threatening Kursk from several directions had swept nearly 100 miles west of Voronezh on the upper Don, pushing steadily over deep snowfields on skis and motorized sleds. The special communique said Shchigry, 33 miles east of Kursk, had fallen, as well as Tim, 42 miles to the southeast.

Twenty-two miles north of Kursk the Russians held Zolotukhino, captured Wednesday.

The Russians said they first sprang their trap on the remnants of nine Axis divisions in the 50-mile stretch between Voronezh and Kastornoye on January 27.

Since that time they have killed 17,000 Axis troops and captured 27,000, including Major General Stomm, commander of the third Hungarian army corps, and two of his aides, an artillery general named Dese, and a Major Cato of the general staff.

If Kursk can be taken the north-south rail line between Smolensk on the Central Front, Kharkov, Ukraine capital, and Melitopol and the Crimea in the south would be cut. Kharkov would be flanked, and the fluidity of the entire network of German supply lines would be hampered.

The Russian armies in the Ukraine already are within 63 miles of Kharkov after capturing the strategic rail junction of Kupyansk Wednesday, and the fall of Voroshilovgrad is expected soon.

Battle front dispatches emphasized the deep snow piles across which the Russians were advancing toward Kursk, whose railway connections with Orel to the north now have been cut.

The Berlin radio said the Soviet landing on the Taman Peninsula occurred early this morning.

"On the coast north of Novorossisk," the broadcast said, "the Russians undertook several large-scale landing attempts to attack the rear of German bridgehead positions on the Taman Peninsula.

"In two places this operation failed, during which most of the landing craft was sunk with their crews before they could reach shore.

"In the third place, however, the Russians succeeded in gaining a foothold. They immediately were pressed together on a narrow stretch of coast."

Among the 903 political prisoners declared free were 300 Poles sent to Britain some time ago. The rest were set free after investigations by the British-American commission on political prisoners. The inquiries were headed by the American and British consuls general, who had been looking into individual cases.

"All Spanish political prisoners will be released as soon as shipping space is found to send them to Mexico, as the Mexican government said it would accept them," an official spokesman said.

It was understood that as soon as asylum could be found for the rest they would be released. The Allied commission investigation is continuing.

Naval Forces Still Sparring In Solomons

regarding the continuing naval action in the Solomons:

"Details concerning recurrent engagements between United States air and surface forces and those of the enemy will not be announced as long as such information might jeopardize the safety of our forces in the area of operations."

The communique reported:

That an American fighter plane strafed Japanese barges off the northwestern tip of Guadalcanal—area held by the enemy—indicating that the Nipponese were still trying to supply their greatly weakened forces on the island.

That Japanese planes attacked our base on Guadalcanal two nights in succession. On Monday night, it was said, enemy planes "in groups of one to four," bombed our positions. They returned the following night. In neither case, were results reported.

American Douglas dive-bombers and Grumann torpedo planes retaliated with an attack on Munda—Jap air base 150 sea miles northwest of Guadalcanal in the middle Solomons. Explosions were caused and fires started.

On the ground, American troops continued their advance westward, capturing elevated positions west of the Bonegi River. "Considerable" enemy equipment was captured and 39 Japs killed. This advance places our forces within a few hundred yards of the enemy strong point at Tassafaronga, 10 miles west of Henderson Field.

"2. On February 2:

"(b) A United States fighter strafed enemy barges near Aruligo point about 4 miles southeast of Cape Esperance on Guadalcanal.

"(c) During the evening a force of Dauntless Dive bombers (Douglas) and Avenger torpedo planes (Grumman TBF) attacked Munda causing explosions and starting several fires.

"(d) During the night of February 2-3 Japanese planes again bombed United States positions on Guadalcanal.

Finnish Peace Move Rumored

form him that he was resuming duties after a four months' illness.

Informed diplomatic circles, however, saw in the simultaneous White House visit and State Department call more than a coincidence.

Coupled with these two developments here, are persistent reports from both Stockholm and Ankara that Finland, as well as Rumania, is nearing the cracking point and are extremely desirous of getting out of the war. As the United States has never declared war on Finland, it is pointed out that Washington would be a logical place for the Finns to present and push any negotiations for peace.

The Finns, foreign reports declare, have already demanded that the Germans send them more food as the price of continuing the war against Russia and are further incensed at the Nazis as a result of Marshal Goering's recent declaration that the Russian attack on Finland in 1939 was nothing more than a bluff.

Food is declared to be one of the ranking problems which had made the Finns come to the conclusion that it is useless to continue the war.

Critics of Big Army Get Hearing Setback

Spain Go-Between?

Nazis Weigh Peace Move, London Hears

By the Associated Press

London, Feb. 4.—The belief that Adolf Hitler may be preparing another peace offensive was expressed today in neutral quarters in London, which said action might be initiated through Spain or Sweden or both.

These sources, which insisted on remaining anonymous, said there have been strange developments in Berlin since the Casablanca conference which suggest an impending move for a negotiated settlement in spite of the unsolicited denials from the Spanish Embassies in Brazil and Chile that Gen. Francisco Franco had been designated a go-between.

The Spanish denial evoked considerable speculation concerning its motive, especially in the absence of any widely circulated reports that Spain had been chosen as a peacemaker.

There were reports in London recently that Hitler's new Ambassador to Spain, Dr. Hans Adolf von Moltke, carried to Madrid a proposal that Franco act as an intermediary, but these lacked any substantiation and attracted little attention.

In spite of the defeats in Russia and the growing threats of Allied action elsewhere in Europe, it was emphasized that talk of a German peace offensive could not be taken to mean the Germans were whipped.

One unofficial peace plan said to have been tried out in Stockholm was reported to have stipulated that Hitler and the Nazi Party would retire from politics and hand Germany over to the army. This appeared, however, to have gotten no farther than Sweden.

De Gaulle Sees New Phase of War About to Start

London, Feb. 4 (AP).—Gen. Charles de Gaulle said tonight that a new phase of the war was about to start—"a phase in which the enemy will seek his salvation by endeavoring simultaneously to disunite his enemies and hold their armies in check."

The Fighting French leader, in a broadcast to France, said the outcome of the war "would remain uncertain until the curtain rose on the final scene."

"France wants to do everything in her power to hasten this denouement," De Gaulle said, "in spite of the terrible plight in which she is thrown, in spite of all efforts to divide and confuse her every day, her effort against the enemy grows stronger."

Senate Committee Learns About Plans For 11 Million Men

Senators who have been contending that the Army has projected its manpower requirements at an indefensibly high figure yesterday received a setback in a secret session of an Appropriations subcommittee investigating the manpower problem.

The session was held for the express purpose of finding out if the expected ultimate size of the armed forces—now projected at almost 11 million men—bore any relation to the ability of the Nation to transport and supply the contemplated military manpower at world battlefronts.

The subcommittee summoned Maj. Gen. W. D. Styer, chief of staff to Lieut. Gen. Brehon B. Somervell, chief of the Army's Services of Supply.

General Styer, it was learned, was able to show the subcommittee that the projected size of the armed forces not only was not larger than could be transported and supplied, but that manpower requirements were determined on the basis of present and expected shipping and other transport facilities.

General Styer told the subcommittee that the Army has no idea of transporting all of the millions of men it has, or will have, in service and training. A very large part of the Army's uniformed manpower, he was reported to have said, would be needed to keep combat troops in the lines.

The subcommittee was said to have been assured by the general that the Army is making a constant survey of manpower in its relation to the problem of what military men call logistics—transportation of men and equipment necessary to put and maintain adequate forces in the field against the enemy.

The general gave the subcommittee a full picture of the manpower-transport problem and backed it with secret figures. He told Senators that in the United States the services of an estimated 13 persons are required to keep one man fighting: This compares, he stated, with a ratio of 1 to 10 in Great Britain, 1 to 8 in Germany and an even lower ratio in Japan.

While General Styer was testifying behind closed doors, War Production Chief Donald M. Nelson was being questioned in a secret session of the Military Affairs Committee. A member of the committee disclosed that Nelson maintained that the country's economy could support an armed force of about 11 millions without crippling industry or agriculture.

Airmen Prevented Attack on U. S., House Unit Hears

By the Associated Press

A threatened attack on the United States last year was warded off and the enemy defeated over the ocean with only 30 minutes' advance notice of the invasion, Col. Edgar S. Gorrell, president of the Air Transport Association of America, told the House Interstate Committee yesterday.

Colonel Gorrell refused to elaborate on his statement. Apparently, however, he referred to the Battle of Midway. Army officials said they knew of no such battle off the continental United States.

"With only 30 minutes' notice of the threatened attack a sufficient number of planes were sent out to sea to lick the enemy before they could reach our shores," Gorrell said.

The committee is considering a bill to rewrite the Civil Aeronautics Act to provide for the future of the industry.

Senate Delays Rutledge Action

Senate consideration of the nomination of Wiley Blount Rutledge to be associate justice of the Supreme Court yesterday was postponed until Monday. Debate on other business lasted so late in the evening that the body adjourned without acting on the executive calendar.

However, it was learned that the prospects of any opposition arising against the Iowan's appointment had dimmed considerably since last Monday.

Hidden Arms Hint Unrest Within Reich

By Edwin Shanke
Associated Press Staff Writer

Stockholm, Feb. 4.—A German newspaper dispatch disclosed today that rifles, pistols and other military equipment of both German and foreign manufacture had been found hidden in attics of Essen, indicating an underground anti-Nazi movement among workers in that arsenal city.

British aerial bombardments were indirectly responsible for uncovery of the caches.

The Essen police chief, in a statement printed by the Essender National Zeitung January 27, hinted that a widespread drive to stamp out opposition elements was imminent.

He demanded that residents of the city yield their weapons or face the heaviest penalties.

It was recalled here that the German press recently said an "illegal Communist Party"—a frequent Nazi label for opposition—was active in Germany.

The statement printed by the Essener National Zeitung said:

"The police president announces that various military guns, pistols and other army equipment were found while repairs were recently being made to roofs damaged by bombs.

"Because, as is well known, the putting away of military weapons—also foreign makes—is forbidden and severely punishable, it is advisable in your own interests to look for such weapons in attics, basements and other rooms and deliver them immediately to the responsible district police station.

"Immediate surrender (of the weapons) will be a protection against punishment."

Democrats of Bronx May Reelect Flynn

New York, Feb. 4 (INS).—Edward J. Flynn probably will be reelected chairman of the executive committee of the Bronx County Democratic organization next week, it was said today by Harry B. Chambers, county committee chairman.

Flynn resigned his Bronx post following his nomination to be Minister to Australia, a nomination subsequently withdrawn by President Roosevelt at Flynn's request. Flynn declined tonight to comment on Chambers' statement.

Labor Pinch Closing Stores In Germany

By the Associated Press

Measures to implement Germany's campaign for mobilization of her final reserves of manpower were reported yesterday in Berlin broadcasts recorded by the Associated Press.

Economics Minister Walther Funk told a press conference in Berlin that between 100,000 and 120,000 additional German retail shops would be closed by March 15 to save labor and coal. Funk estimated the new measure would release about 300,000 persons for war employment.

Shops selling luxury articles will be closed without exception. Several thousand employes of banks and insurance companies also were affected.

The Berlin radio said that "artists, painters, writers, musicians, too, as members of the so-called free professions, must report" for registration under the government's new compulsory service decree.

The announcement said that "architects, lawyers, restaurant keepers and artisans" would be required to fill out forms and the labor offices would determine whether they could be employed for national defense.

All men from 16 to 65 and all women from 17 to 45 are to be mobilized for compulsory labor service.

All-Virginia WAAC Company to Be Honored

Richmond, Va., Feb. 4 (AP).—A ceremony will be held on the portico of the State Capitol Building at 12:30 p. m. Sunday honoring the first contingent of the "First Virginia WAAC Company" to leave for the Daytona, Fla., training center.

A committee, headed by Dr. Douglas S. Freeman, editor of the Richmond News Leader, selected the name "First Virginia WAAC Company" from a number of suggestions made to the Army recruiting station here.

British on Mayu Press Japs Hard

New Delhi, Feb. 4 (AP).—British forces on the Mayu Peninsula in western Burma are maintaining steady pressure on the Japanese lines at Rathedaung and Dondaik, but the enemy is well dug in and is putting up stubborn resistance, a British communique announced today.

The announcement gave no other details of the land fighting, but said the British forces were being strongly supported in the air. Rathedaung is about 25 miles northwest of Akyab.

Roberts Appointed House Doorkeeper

The House Democratic majority, in caucus yesterday, chose Ralph Roberts, 45, for the post of House doorkeeper to succeed the late Joseph Sinnott. A native of Rockport, Ind., he has been assistant House doorkeeper.

Friends of Will Rogers, former Oklahoma member of the House, had urged Rogers' election to succeed Sinnott.

Two Named Admirals; President's Aide to Command Battleship

By Marshall Andrews
Post Staff Writer

Two Navy captains, one a Washington resident, were nominated to be rear admirals by President Roosevelt yesterday and the President's naval aide was assigned to command one of the "biggest and most powerful ships afloat."

The officers nominated for promotion were Capt. Aaron S. Merrill of 2619 O Street Northwest, and Capt. Claude S. Gillette, brother of Senator Gillette (Democrat) of Iowa. Captain Gillette's nomination was confirmed unanimously by the Senate after it was presented by his brother.

The President's naval aide, Capt. John L. McCrea, was relieved of his assignment at his own request, the White House said, to take a command afloat. He will be succeeded by Rear Admiral Wilson Brown, now commanding the First Naval District with headquarters at Boston. Admiral Brown served as Mr. Roosevelt's first naval aide 10 years ago.

In announcing Brown's appointment, White House Secretary Stephen Early disclosed that, as a vice admiral, he commanded a task force in the Pacific last March which won a victory in a fight known as "Lae and Salamaua." The Japanese lost 25 vessels in that engagement. He reverted to his permanent rank of rear admiral when he was made commandant at Boston to succeed Rear Admiral Adolphus Andrews. He had in recent years been superintendent of the Naval Academy.

Admiral Gillette was in command of the Navy Yard at Pearl Harbor on the day of the Japanese sneak attack. His home is at Crete, Nebr., and he is at present assigned as manager of the Puget Sound (Wash.) Navy Yard.

Captain Merrill was born at Natchez, Miss., March 26, 1890, and was graduated from the Naval Academy in 1912. During the first World War he served on destroyers and immediately after the war commanded a troopship and served as aide to Rear Admiral Mark L. Bristol, United States High Commissioner at Constantinople, Turkey. He has been in command at sea since April 1942.

Captain McCrea was born May 29, 1891, at Marlette, Mich., and was graduated from the Naval Academy in 1915. He served during the first World War in the New York flagship of Admiral Hugh Rodman, operating with the British Grand Fleet. He was appointed aide to the President in January 1942. His tour in this post would have expired in October.

bilization plans to be set up in shortage areas—was designed to eliminate "wasteful labor turnover in essential activities," reduce migration of labor by using local labor wherever possible, direct labor to employers engaged in essential activities in preference to other employers, and to provide "maximum utilization of manpower resources."

Job Priorities Planned

Hiring controls are to be used to set up a system of job priorities, McNutt said, with persons referred to jobs in order of urgency. One phase of the job priority policy was announced earlier this week with the creation of a list of "nondeferable" jobs which may not be filled by draft-age able-bodied men after April 1.

Workers are to be referred to jobs where their skills will be used "most effectively," and without discrimination as to race, color, creed, sex, national origin, or citizenship (except as required by law), McNutt's statement declared.

McNutt delegated authority to regional and area directors of WMC to put these programs into effect. Area director for Washington under Foy is Ramy B. Deschner.

Foy and Deschner will be expected to develop the Washington program in consultation with the management-labor committee to be set up shortly. The committee is expected to contain representatives of local A. F. L. and C. I. O. unions, in addition to representatives of local management and persons to represent Government personnel offices. A Navy officer will probably be invited to sit on the committee as the "management" representative for the Navy Yard.

The committee will consider "safeguards" necessary to make the "stabilization" program operate fairly. Among the safeguards will be regulations governing the issuance of job releases to prevent injustice, it was understood.

Corporal Teaches And Also Learns

Jacksonville, N. C. (AP).—Corpl. H. C. Johnson of the State highway patrol is teaching the eighth grade in Jacksonville High School—a job he was persuaded to take after a teacher resigned and three preachers in turn were forced to stop because of their other duties.

"I'm teaching classes in algebra, English and history and doing my best to keep 'em quiet," he said.

'If Anybody Had Told Me'

Ruml Critical

Some of the compromise proposals came in for criticism from Ruml while committee members went after his plan, but he centered his fire on Treasury contentions that the Government would lose a 10-billion-dollar asset, and that the greatest gain would go to individuals in the high-income brackets.

Doughton set the pace for quizzing Ruml when he asked whether a business firm would write off a debt as Ruml was suggesting the Government do, and said: "I don't think it's good for any creditor to forgive any debtor that's able to pay."

Ruml said he knew of a large New York department store, and an Iowa doctor that had proved by experience it was sometimes "profitable to cancel a debt to get on a cash collection basis.

"Why don't you sell that to all the business people?" observed Doughton.

While the hearing was on, Speaker Rayburn told his press conference that he favored a pay-as-you-go tax plan, but made clear that he would not favor forgiveness of all 1942 taxes.

Ruml at one point said he preferred not to use the word forgiveness in describing his plan. The word, he said, had created confusion in the public mind "and in my own."

"It suggests, and wrongly, that this year the taxpayer will have a year in which he pays no taxes, and the Treasury will have a year in which it gets no revenue—nothing could be farther from the truth."

Instead, he said, by changing the method of assessing income taxes, his plan would turn the tax clock ahead "not stop the clock."

Far from depriving the Federal Government of a 10-billion-dollar asset, Ruml declared his plan would improve the financial well being of the Government by increasing its revenues with a pay-as-you-go system, without increasing the taxes of any taxpayers. Taxable income this year, he pointed out, will be larger than that of 1942. Taxes collected on a pay-as-you-go system against 1943 income would bring in more at the same rates than the present levies would bring the Government on 1942 individual incomes. Over a period of rising national income, he argued, the Government's revenue would be increased through his plan.

On this Ruml told the committee that "it seems to me a national income of 180 billions within the lifetime of men now at war is not impossible."

Advances in production, in science and technical skills, and in health and nutrition of the individual, could be counted on to make it possible for every individual to produce more than ever before, Ruml argued.

15 U. S. Paratroops Taken in Morocco, Arrive in Madrid

London, Feb. 4 (AP).—The Berlin radio asserted today that 15 United States paratroopers who landed by mistake in Spanish Morocco have arrived in Madrid under guard.

It broadcast the following, dates lined Madrid: "It is stated that they will be escorted to the Portuguese frontier within the next few days."

This suggested that the soldiers might be released.

Whether Spanish authorities free them was said to depend on the circumstances of their descent upon Spanish Morocco.

If the parachutists were forced to land because their plane was in distress, it is possible the same international law would apply to them as to distressed mariners, who are given a stipulated time to make emergency repairs and leave neutral waters.

DIRECT-LINE, international air routes, operated with United Nations support . . . more domestic feeder lines, with more and better airports . . . a great, active air transportation system, instead of a small, static military air force, to police the peace, augment amity and understanding between nations . . .

All these are not the postwar proposal of Seversky, Al Williams or any other enthusiastic airman . . . but the seriously reasoned and presented program of the Vice President of the United States, Henry A. There may be other and better postwar programs, but Henry Wallace's is important . . . as definite intimation that official Washington regards government support as essential for peacetime power and the aviation industry.

THIS editorial program has resulted not only in immeasurably increased influence for this magazine, wider quotation and recognition in the world press . . . but has brought to this magazine a steadily growing audience of Americans who constitute the basis of all public opinion, provide support for every national policy and program. Rubber Plan Avoids Crises, Nelson Says

By Francis J. Kelly
Associated Press Staff Writer

Donald M. Nelson, chairman of the War Production Board, declared yesterday that the recent granting of top priorities for 55 per cent of the buna-S synthetic rubber program—a decision which the armed services appealed to the White House and lost—would prevent a "real crisis" in the Nation's rubber position next October and November.

He disclosed that action had been taken to assure completion by mid-July of plants with an annual capacity of 435,000 tons of buna-S rubber. Otherwise, he said, the Nation's rubber stockpile was in danger of exhaustion next fall, "and if this Nation runs out of rubber, all of the United Nations run out of rubber, for we are the source of supply for the United Nations."

Mr. Nelson referred to the action as a "55 per cent" directive, explaining that individuals differed on figuring the actual percentages. However, he emphasized that the rest of the program was not being stopped but would receive normal priorities.

In an obvious reply to charges by Army and Navy officials that the accelerated rubber program will impair the output of aviation gasoline, escort vessels, warplanes and merchant ships, Mr. Nelson insisted that on the contrary these competing programs would be delayed not more than a month or two against threatened delays of three to four months "if they had been left scrambling underneath the surface in disorderly fashion" for scarce component parts.

Attitude On Private Cars

In one sentence the WPB chairman disposed of a proposal by Robert P. Patterson, Undersecretary of War, to William M. Jeffers, rubber director, that more sweeping measures should first be taken to save rubber, including Government purchase or requisitioning of seven million of the nation's 27 million passenger cars.

"Mere conservation of the present rubber supply," Mr. Nelson told a pres conference, "will not solve our uroblem."

Emphasizing that rubber production is one of the five "must" programs that are being pushed early this year because of the intensity of the war, Mr. Nelson insisted that "not even a King Solomon can choose between them," and that none of the others will be sacrificed to rubber.

"We chose rubber first," he explained in what was taken as a dig at the armed services, "because it had the production of components scheduled in more orderly fashion. Second, rubber seemed to me to be something we had to assure for this economy. Without new sources, our stockpile would dwindle. The supply of natural rubber is diminishing each day toward the vanishing point."

Stock Pile Assured

The 55 per cent decision, which the Army and Navy, with Mr. Nelson's consent, appealed to the White House and obtained a ruling from James F. Byrnes, economic stabilization director, confirming it, was issued to make sure that "at least 55 per cent of the buna-S program would be in production before we reached the point of danger," Mr. Nelson said.

Explaining that he had not halved the entire rubber program of 1,307,000 tons called for by the Baruch rubber survey report of last September, Mr. Nelson said the remainder of the program would go forward in proper balance with other acute needs.

Memphis Wins Order Halting Scrap Rail Seizure

Memphis, Feb. 4 (AP).—The city of Memphis won today a Federal injunction to prevent the removal of approximately 1500 tons of scrap rails embedded in 78 railway crossings.

War Materials, Inc., Federal scrap collecting agency, sought to remove the rails.

United States District Judge Marion Boyd held that "removal of the rails" at this time "would cause irreparable damage to the city of Memphis from the standpoint of public safety."

"The court finds that there is available at this time in private hands and in the city of Memphis at least 2334 tons of materials of like kind," the court order continued, and this "is more accessible than that sought and can be collected at less expense." The imbedded rails are designed to cushion the shock on automobiles crossing railroads.

Million Nazis Declared Lost In Russian Winter Campaign

By Relman Morin
Associated Press Staff Writer

London, Feb. 4.—Germany and her allies have lost more than one million men since Russia sprang her big winter offensive last November 19 at Stalingrad and the continuing successes have surprised even the Soviet high command, an informed source said tonight.

The victories chalked up by the advancing Red army now have caused the Russians to redraw completely their plans, so that the offensive won't halt even when the "farthest limit" of previously specified objectives has been reached, said this source, who cannot be named but who is thoroughly conversant with the situation.

The rate of the Soviet advance might decrease, he said, in the early spring months owing to extended lines of communications and transport difficulties resulting from roads that turn into quagmires.

"But the forward movement itself will continue."

German losses since November 19 were listed at "well over one million men." This figure was arrived at through careful analysis of reports and estimates from the actual battle fronts plus "regular information" from various parts of occupied Europe through which two-way movement of German reinforcements and wounded has been proceeding.

A total of more than 700,000 Nazis were killed, wounded and captured by January 19, not counting the entire German Sixth army which was trapped at Stalingrad, and since has been liquidated by the Russians.

Two other factors which can't be depicted in columns of figures nor shown on maps also motivated the alteration of the Red army strategy, this source said.

One is the weakening of German morale, and the other is the development of a new pattern for grouping artillery which has given the Russian infantry "an equal if not more than equal chance" against the German defense-in-depth system.

Using the most guarded phraseology, this source said the individual will of the German soldier to resist is markedly diminishing. Also the behavior of those captured indicated that the spirit of the retreating Nazi army has "undoubtedly deteriorated—certainly by comparison with what was encountered by the Russians last winter."

This was attributed not only to German defeats, but to loss of confidence in the German high command, particularly since the encirclement, and then the total destruction of the Sixth Army.

The sudden shattering of the German steel-and-concrete ring around Leningrad was a victory of almost equal importance.

"The Germans are masters at building fixed defenses and they had for many months perfected depth-fortifications around Leningrad. The belt was between 9 and 10 miles in depth.

"The success achieved from the new Russian method of using heavy artillery against this type of defense can be duplicated wherever depth-fortifications are met," this source concluded.

British 6-Pound Shells Knock Out New Nazi 62-Ton Land Warship on Tunisian Front

By the Associated Press

Allied Headquarters in North Africa, Feb. 4.—A new 56-ton German Mark VI tank had been knocked out on the Tunisian front by British six-pounders which pierced its thick armor with four shells, an Allied spokesman said tonight.

"We have investigated the tank inside and out and found that it had been pierced by four six-pounder shells," the spokesman said. He referred to one of the two land warships knocked out in a battle several days ago at Bou Arada.

The German tanks were reported to have 7 inches of armor in front and equipped with an 88-mm. cannon.

London, Feb. 4. (AP).—First battle estimates of Germany's giant new Mark VI tank failed to impress military observers here who said tonight the weapon probably was of greater value defensively than for aggressive operations.

Small Number

Only a relatively small number were believed in use in Tunisia.

The composite picture of the tank as gathered from American, British and foreign sources in London indicate the Mark VI weighs between 56 and 62 tons. The main armor belt is about 7 inches thick and slightly more at the vulnerable spots. The heaviest gun is an 88-mm. The tanks carries a crew of eight, lumbers at about 22 miles an hour and undoubtedly produces heavy fire power with all its guns.

One well informed foreign source said it was equipped with a flame-thrower having a 75-yard range.

This combination of armor and guns is much heavier than anything used by the United States or Britain. The 70-ton Russian Voroshilov tank has been in use in the East but has not been prominent in the winter offensive.

The main armor is supposedly invulnerable against 75-mm. guns, heaviest carried by American and British tanks. It probably can withstand 105-mm. shells, the heaviest from the self-propelled antitank guns. But the Mark VI still has the usual Achilles heel in its treads, wheels within the treads and in its soft belly.

A few well-placed shots even from a light antitank rifle placed on these spots is capable of immobilizing the monsters. This was indicated in the official report that two were knocked out in the Germans' recent unsuccessful Tunisian thrust toward Robaa.

The great weight of the Mark VI undoubtedly will complicate its movement particularly in a country like Tunisia where few of the primitive bridges are able to bear it.

The greatest virtue, military experts here say, is its possibility as a mobile pillbox for defensive purposes around Tunis and Bizerte. When dug in 2 or 3 feet, the more vulnerable parts are underground. Direct hits by heavy artillery or bombs are then required to destroy it.

Attack Case Ordered Taken To Grand Jury

Grand jury action was ordered yesterday against Leonard A. Saunders, 41, Negro, held by police on a charge of raping a 17-year-old waitress who worked in a Connecticut Avenue restaurant where Saunders was a dishwasher.

Police said the alleged rape occurred in the hallway of the rooming house where the girl lived. According to police records the girl was returning home after work and as she entered the rooming house in the 1500 block of Nineteenth Street Southwest, she was allegedly choked into unconsciousness and raped.

The restaurant in the case is the same one that employed Jarvis Roosevelt Catoe who was executed last month after confessing to seven rape-murders. Saunders was reported to have been a friend of Catoe's.

Eberstadt Loses Some WPB Powers

plan. Some industry people were reported to have objected to WPB, and one industrialist was reported to have been instructed by a WPB industry division subject to Eberstadt to throw Wilson's order "in the waste basket."

At Nelson's regular press conference yesterday an announcement quoting Ralph J. Cordiner, Wilson's director of production scheduling, reaffirming the original Wilson order was distributed. Observers interpreted this action as an indorsement by Nelson of Wilson.

Officials pointed out that the fight is more basic than a struggle between two bureaucrats for control of parts of a Government agency. By having orders placed on corporation books now for the whole year, Wilson sets the pattern for allocations of raw materials to be made later by Eberstadt. By securing control over the aluminum division, Wilson secured jurisdiction over one of the three basic metals which are regulated by Eberstadt's controlled materials plan. It is understood that the move was made because 80 per cent of the country's aluminum goes into airplanes which is regarded as Wilson's special responsibility.

Favored Civilian Control

Wilson, former president of the General Electric Co., has been regarded as the champion of civilian control of war production in WPB, with Eberstadt, former chairman of the Army-Navy Munitions Board, regarded as the military's champion.

Nelson brought both men in to strengthen his organization and eliminate materials and production bottlenecks which were preventing us from reaching our production goals. Observers have believed for months that a clash between the two strong personalities was inevitable.

Asked if he expected orders for components placed on manufacturers' books with Wilson's approval might be changed by later allocations of materials by Eberstdat, Nelson replied, "I doubt it."

Nelson added that he thought Wilson's division "felt quite rightly" that orders ought to be on the books now to enable the group to plan production schedules.

Cordiner warned manufacturers that late orders will be scheduled on the basis received and that contractors who fail to act promptly "have much to lose."

"We have not asked the impossible," Cordiner said. "Mr. Wilson's letter was sent out January 20, and everybody was given enough time to act, if prompt action were taken."

Loose Talk Cause Of Ship Sinking, Survivor Relates

Denver, Feb. 4 (AP).—Loose talk caused the torpedoing of a United Nations cargo vessel in the Atlantic, Chief Steward James E. Ritchie of Philadelphia said today in recounting his 31 days in an open lifeboat with 19 other survivors and a dog.

Ritchie, 41, who is here convalescing from his ordeal, said that on the twenty-second day a German submarine came along. The Nazi captain asked the emaciated survivors how long they had been at sea.

"'Mein Gott, 22 tag!' exclaimed the captain, and he took the officer in charge off the lifeboat. When the American officer revealed the name of the torpedoed ship, the Germans promptly told the American what port it sailed from, where it was going and what cargo it carried.

"That's proof somebody blabbed, and the Nazis were placed on our trail," said Ritchie.

Civil War Output Control Nipped

other than the bill's sponsors.

During a heated debate which raged during most of the day's session, Senator Pepper (Democrat) of Florida, scarcely bothered to employ guarded language in charging that the Army and Navy deliberately, and, as it developed, successfully, sought to have the bill referred to the Military Affairs Committee in this Congress.

"The representatives of the Navy and War departments have committed gross indiscretion in trying to influence the decision as to which committee this bill should be referred," Pepper declared.

"I'll put the finger where the flesh is tender," he shouted. "This bill provides that procurement (of munitions) should be in civilian hands, not in military hands."

Instead of denying the charge, members of the Military Committee contended that the bill was referred to the wrong committee in the Seventy-seventh Congress and that the mistake ought to be rectified in the Seventy-eighth Congress.

People Wearied

Senator Pepper charged that War Production Board Chairman Donald M. Nelson has "abdicated" full powers over war production given him by President Roosevelt and now functions as an "umpire" among war agencies. The people, he warned, are "tired of frustration" and wearied "sorely" by "agencies fighting here in Washington."

Apart from the issue of civilian versus military rule of war production, involved in the Senate's vote was the parliamentary question of "proper" committee reference and traditional, jealously guarded intercommittee prerogatives.

Senators Barkley and McNary have insisted that, in this Congress, bills would be referred to committees having palpable jurisdiction, as opposed to a practice in the last Congress of permitting Senators sponsoring bills to designate committees by which they were to be considered.

As Senator Kilgore (Democrat) of West Virginia told the Senate yesterday the bill in question, a measure to set up an "Office of War Mobilization," would affect not only the War and Navy Departments, but nearly all war agencies.

Senator Pepper last night said he was considering introduction of a resolution to direct Vice President Wallace and the majority and minority leaders to study means of modernizing Congressional machinery.

port would have to be made within 30 days after the bill became law and every 30 days thereafter. Moreover, any agency's personnel could be reduced by order of the Budget Bureau, if the bureau found the number of employes there to be in excess of minimum needs.

The bill would take effect May 30, 1943—the day after the current bill expires, and run until June 30, 1945.

Nazis Will Bomb D. C., Air Authority Warns at OCD Meeting

invitations to area civilian defense committees to attend. The meeting was by invitation. Six area chairmen were present. Although heads of all protective services spoke, no mention was made of the function of civilian defense committees in securing recruits.

Colonel Hartley, principal speaker, warned that poison gas might be employed in an attack on Washington. Now on the inactive list, he was a flier in the first World War and was awarded several medals, including the Distinguished Service Cross. He lives in Edgewater, Md., and has written several books on aviation.

"There are many possible and many wholly feasible plans for bombing Washington," the former flier said. He indicated his belief that raids will be made just before dawn in bad flying weather, with low visibility.

Every pilot knows that once he has distributed his bombs he can keep on flying inland here, say as far as the Mississippi, and in some vacant field burn his ship and make a clean getaway for a few days.

"An attempt will be made. The success of it will largely depend on a break of luck in the weather forecasting, to bomb, take over some inland field or several of them, kill all guards, refuel and get away quickly. Some raiders will return via Iceland, some via the Azores, some via Africa, using secret auxiliary bases down south. All will be land planes.

"The nearer Hitler's swan song approaches, the more vigilant we must be," Hartney asserted. He told his audience that for the past eight months Germany has been building huge flying fortresses which can carry two block-busters (8000 pounds) or 2000 incendiary bombs 4500 miles at a cruising speed of 200 miles an hour. Up until now Hitler has not had these planes, Hartney said.

The speaker insisted that "ton for ton of bombs, the damage in both loss of life and property, will be far greater over here than in Europe." Block-busters, he said, will use delayed action fuses, permitting a get-away by the enemy aircraft, and incendiary bombs will follow the main attack.

Plans were made public yesterday by Joseph Sanders, District evacuating director, for billeting 11,000 Washingtonians in Hagerstown, Md., in the event of large-scale bombing here by the enemy. Sixteen other nearby counties, 14 in Virginia and two in Maryland, have been named by the Governors of these States as reception centers for Washington evacuees, surveys of accommodations are being made in these areas. The District received a $2350 grant yesterday from the President's special fund to pay evacuation office expenses for four months.

Emergency vehicles permitted to operate during real or practice air raid alarms in the Eastern Defense Command were ordered to adopt uniform triangular white pennants with the OCD in red, and headlight masks at night. These devices must be used after the new air raid regulations go into effect after midnight, February 16.

Sergt. John F. Ryan, in charge of auxiliary police training, illustrated civilian defense structure in a blackboard lecture. Prime purpose of civilian defense, he said, was to conquer fear and avoid panic by training citizens and keeping them busy.

Fire Chief Stephen Porter was warmly applauded when he declared he would gamble his life on his auxiliary firemen. He showed an auxiliary dressed in one of the much discussed coats which he declared were "better than nothing."

Chief Air Raid Warden William J. Mileham and Colonel Bolles also spoke.

Stimson Hails Reds, Warns of Long War

Washington Bureau Chicago Sun

Secretary of War Henry L. Stimson yesterday hailed "continuing impressive Russian victories," but warned that Nazi bravery and tenacity even in defeat serves notice on America that she faces a long and bitter fight.

"The battle of Stalingrad was one of the worst military defeats ever suffered by Germany, and now frees large numbers of Russians for action elsewhere," he said.

"But we must remember that this battle was won only by a long and bitter struggle. The Germans fought bravely and there is no sign of a German demoralization. It is indicative of the hard struggle ahead of us."

Stimson told his press conference that American supplies are now reaching Russia in ever-increasing amounts, that convoys to Murmansk are operating with decreasing losses, and that American engineers are expanding transportation facilities in Iran to step up the flow of goods to Russia from the Persian Gulf.

A significant part of the whole Russian picture, the Secretary said, is the lack of German air activity. Stimson noted that the Germans have diverted many planes to North Africa and to Europe, but he said that even so "the once mighty German air force" should have been able to maintain sizable air power on the Russian front.

The Secretary said that there were three possible explanations for the lack of German air activity:

1. That her production of planes is less and her losses greater than we had estimated.
2. That she may be suffering from a gasoline shortage.
3. That she may be "husbanding her planes for some new offensive."

Stimson said he believed the Russians were now trying to capture the three key cities of Rostov, Kharkov and Kursk. He added that if they are successful they will have pushed the Germans back approximately to where the Nazis were when they launched their second offensive last June.

In other theaters, Stimson said the "stalemate" continues in Tunisia, but the harbor at Tripoli is rapidly being repaired, and Allied planes already are operating from airfields around Tripoli which the Germans tried to destroy.

The land offensive on Guadalcanal continues to go well, Stimson said. He added that there are still "substantial numbers" of American Marines on Guadalcanal, although now most of the force is soldiers.

"On the whole the military situation is still favorable, but there are no grounds yet for excessive optimism or the belief in an early end to the struggle," he concluded.

Elmer Davis Defies Stimson and Hull

HOW INTENSE Cabinet officers feel about the State Department's policy in North Africa leaked out when Elmer Davis asked for a passport to send his Office of War Information French expert, Edgar Mowrer, to Algiers.

Mowrer, long Chicago Daily News correspondent in Paris, knows the French intimately, was a fervid interventionist, has been a close friend and supporter of Secretary of War Stimson and his one-time boss, Secretary of the Navy Knox. But having lived in France, Mowrer also has been a vigorous critic of our pro-Fascist policy in North Africa.

After Davis asked the State Department for Mowrer's passport, several days passed. Nothing happened. Finally Davis himself phoned Secretary Hull, asked if the matter could be expedited. Hull replied that he would look into it.

Thereafter, Secretary of War Stimson called Elmer Davis on the phone.

"I ask you as a personal favor not to send Mr. Mowrer to North Africa," Stimson said. "He will be a disturbing factor. He will upset many of the things we are working on. He won't fit in at all."

To this Davis replied: "Mowrer is the man I need in North Africa and I've decided to send him."

Later, Davis got a call from the Secretary of State. Mr. Hull also urged that Mr. Mowrer not be sent to North Africa. He made the same arguments as the Secretary of War, namely that Mowrer would be a disruptive influence. But Davis stood his ground.

"I want Mowrer in North Africa," he told Hull, "and also I want him to have the power to bring other men over to work with him."

"Well, I shall not take personal responsibility in the matter," replied Secretary Hull. "The passport will have to be ordered by the President of the United States."

And while Mowrer, stanch friend of democratic Frenchmen, was kept waiting in Washington until Roosevelt's return, Mr. Hull gave a State Department visa to Marcel Peyrouton, who, as Vichy chief of police, had arrested De Gaullists, shot anti-Hitlerites, jailed Jews. But Hull expedited his flight from Argentina to become political governor of Algeria.

Capital Chaff

KEEP AN EYE on Dick Patterson, former Assistant Secretary of Commerce, now head of RKO, as next United States Minister to Canada . . . A secret session of United States Senators sat with Chinese leaders the other day to try to drum up more aid to China—now virtually nil, despite Roosevelt's statement that more was being flown in now than went over the Burma Road. (F. D. R. didn't let his Far Eastern experts see that speech or he never would have said it) . . . The Railroad Brotherhoods and the A. F. L. will back John L. Lewis in demanding that the "Little Steel" formula providing for increases of only 15 per cent above wages on January 1, 1941, be broken. . . . Railroad machinists now get less than $1 an hour while machinists in other industries get $1.50. Yet railroad machinists can't get a raise under the formula because their wages are now more than 15 per cent above their pay in January, 1941 . . . Phil Murray who feels the hot breath of John L. Lewis on his neck, will also demand that the formula be broken. If he doesn't the C. I. O. is likely to lose membership to Lewis, because Lewis pioneered for higher wages . . . Murray, however, will pin the blame on Ed O'Neal of the Farm Bureau and on conservative farm lobbying organizations which hiked the cost of living.

Ed Pauley Resigns

Ed Pauley has quietly resigned as secretary of the Democratic National Committee, which illustrates another problem F. D. R. and the Democrats face in keeping a party organization together.

Pauley resigned because he wanted to build a high octane gas refinery in Mexico and found himself on the hot spot pushing the project via the United States Government while secretary of the Democratic National Committee.

Pauley happened to be one of the best secretaries the committee has had, raised practically all of the money for the 1942 campaign, despite the fact that money-raising is supposed to be the job of the Treasurer. However, no businessman can live these days without doing business with the Government, and as secretary of the committee he is on the hot spot if he does business with the Government. So as soon as someone can be elected in his place, his resignation will be accepted.

NOTE: The Army and Navy oppose a high octane refinery in Mexico because of the need of critical materials. The State Department supports Pauley's general plan, though differing on details.

Why Stalin Declined

The diplomatic grapevine has brought a new reason why Stalin didn't want to join the backgammon party at Casablanca—the danger of being dragged into a political discussion over future boundaries of Europe.

One year ago, Foreign Minister Litvinoff flew to London, took the initiative in discussing postwar boundaries. But the British were gun-shy.

Since then Stalin has reversed his policy of advance boundary agreements, has announced a policy of self-determination of nations. With large Russian and Slavic blocs in Poland, the Baltic states, Rumania, this means a good slice of Eastern Europe would join Soviet Russia.

However, some United States plus some British leaders now have reversed themselves about not agreeing on boundaries in advance. Perhaps fearing that Russia might reach too far, they want to work out preliminary peace plans now rather than haggle over them at the conference table.

This advance dealing of the boundary cards, according to the diplomatic grapevine, was what Stalin wanted to avoid at Casablanca.

NOTE: What Russia wants after the war is a slice of Finland, one-half of Poland, the Baltic states, the Carpathian provinces of Hungray, the Dobrudja from Rumania, all of Bulgaria, which is very pro-Russian, enough of Jugoslav—also pro-Russian—to secure an outlet on the Adriatic; and an outlet on the Persian Gulf. This would give Russia direct access to the Mediterranean and the Indian Ocean. Obviously Churchill, who says he wasn't made Prime Minister to liquidate the empire, can't be enthusiatic about that.

HERO'S WIFE HELPS—President Roosevelt awards the Congressional Medal of Honor to Maj. Gen. Alexander A. Vandegrift of the Marines for "outstanding and heroic accomplishment" under adverse conditions against Japs in the Solomons. Mrs. Vandegrift assists the President as Maj. A. A. Vandegrift, jr., looks on. This was the President's first camera appearance since his return from his African trip

Maj. Gen. Alexander Arthur Vandegrift, commanding officer of United States Marine Forces at Guadalcanal, yesterday received the thirtieth Congressional Medal of Honor conferred on heroes of the United States Navy, including the Marine Corps, since the United States entered World War II.

President Roosevelt gave the decoration in person at the White House, with Mrs. Vandegrift and her son, Maj. Alexander A. Vandegrift, jr., of the Marine Corps, as witnesses. Admiral Ernest J. King, commander in chief of the United States Fleet, and Lieut. Gen. Thomas Holcomb, Marine Corps commandant, also were present.

General Vandegrift, who successfully directed the first invasion by United States troops of Japanese-held territory previously had been decorated with the Navy Cross by Admiral Chester A. Nimitz, commander in chief of the Pacific Fleet, last October at Guadalcanal.

The Congressional Medal, highest United States decoration for bravery, was given General Vandegrift "for outstanding accomplishment above and beyond the call of duty as commanding officer of the First Marine Division in operations against enemy Japanese forces in the Solomon Islands during the period August 7, 1942, to December 9, 1942."

Economic Institute Session Urges Double War Offensive

A double offensive against the Axis, embodying attacks on both the military front and against totalitarian postwar plans, was advocated last night at a social security conference which brought together a distinguished array of United Nations diplomats, congressmen, Government officials and representatives of a number of national trade and professional associations having offices in Washington.

Chairman Louis Lorwin, of the Institute of World Economics, which sponsored the conference along with the Economic Policy Discussion Group, said the "double offensive" could best be realized by insuring the wellbeing of all United Nations citizens through improved social security arrangements.

The beneficial effect upon New Zealand following the adoption in 1938 of a social and economic planning procedure which insured a reasonable security from cradle to grave of all who participated in the government's program was described by Minister Walter Nash of that country.

Another speaker was Minister Harold Butler of Great Britain, who told how business and government had cooperated in rendering speedy assistance to citizens whose homes had been wrecked or destroyed by enemy air raiders.

Social Security studies now under way in the United States were discussed by several speakers, as well as pending legislation on the subject and post-war planning studies instituted by scores of large industrial concerns in this country.

The conference, held at Barker Hall, Seventeenth and K Streets Northwest, was attended by J. B. Brigden, of the Australian Legation; Carl Cervenka, counselor of the Czechoslovakian Legation; Jones Creech, Labor member of the British Parliament; Frederic A. Delano, chairman of the National Resources Planning Board; Charles W. Eliot, director of the National Resources Planning Board; Ching-Kien Hsieh, third secretary of the Chinese Embassy; W. C. Naude, attache of the legation of the Union of South Africa; A. Niazi, attache of the Egyptian legation; A. H. Phillipse, of the Netherlands Economic Mission; Senator Claude Pepper of Florida and Arthur Capper of Kansas, and scores of others.

Houdini's Widow Gives Up Trying To Reach Husband

Hollywood, Feb. 4 (AP). — Frail Mrs. Beatrice Houdini, who spent 10 years trying to reach her late husband, the famous Harry Houdini, in the spirit world, today renounced her long-cherished faith in communication after death, and added she is skeptical about any form of life hereafter.

Long gravely ill, Mrs. Houdini was cheerful beneath her oxygen tent as she talked with newsmen at a rest home.

"I would like very much," she said, "to believe that I was again to see Harry and my mother. But I am skeptical. No one has been able to prove there is a hereafter."

Before Houdini, the famous magician, died in 1926 he made a compact with his wife that he would attempt to reach her from the spirit world.

Annual Drive For Orchestra Opens Mar. 24

With Milton W. King, Washington attorney, as chairman, the thirteenth annual sustaining fund campaign of the National Symphony Orchestra was set yesterday for March 24-April 7 with a goal of $110,000. Budget of the orchestra is about $175,000, and $65,000 is expected from concert revenue during the 1943-44 season.

There will also be a national campaign under the direction of Representative Joseph Clark Baldwin of New York. Representative Baldwin, it was said, heard the orchestra last summer and decided to conduct, personally, a Nation-wide campaign for funds.

Officials of the orchestra, directed by Dr. Hans Kindler seemed confident that the money needed would be collected, and that perhaps anything procured through Representative Baldwin's own national drive would facilitate expansion of the orchestra, now with 80 members.

Imported Workers Need Not Buy Md. Auto Licenses

Baltimore, Feb. 4 (AP).—W. Lee Elgin, commissioner of motor vehicles, said today out-of-State war workers who have moved their families to Maryland for the duration would not be required to purchase Maryland license plates instead of their home-State tags.

Elgin thus reversed a previous statement that duration families would be required to buy Maryland tags "since they are getting benefits of the State schools and roads."

"Under Governor O'Conor's proclamation, full reciprocity is given to out-of-State residents engaged in war industries, even though they bring their families to Maryland and established a residence here," the commissioner said.

"However, valid out-of-State tags must be displayed, and if workers are in Maryland and near the time when their tags expire, they may reregister in their home State, but they cannot operate on expired tags. The same reciprocity is given to men in the military service."

German Army Of Stalingrad Plods to Prison

By the Associated Press

Moscow, Feb. 4.—Pravda reported today that the tattered German army of Stalingrad finally was crossing the Volga—plodding east across the ice in seemingly endless captive columns, headed for prison camps far behind the battle lines.

The newspaper said Rumanian generals and some of the German commanders captured in the collapse of the Axis pocket at Stalingrad showed resentment toward Field Marshal Friedrich Paulus. They said he concealed from them the Russian ultimatum last month to surrender or be wiped out, Pravda reported.

It said that when General Bratescu, commander of the first Rumanian calvary division, surrendered afoot he was asked:

"Where are all your horses, general?"

"They have been eaten by Field Marshal Paulus' soldiers," the Rumanian was said to have replied.

The columns of prisoners plodding to the east were described as resembling a tattered masquerade.

Pravda said the captives lacked warm coats and had bound their feet in paper and rags to keep out the cold.

Pravda said Paulus surrendered only when the Red army surrounded his headquarters in the cellar of a large building in the center of the city after tanks and Tommy gunners had fought their way in around the building during the night.

Armed Forces and Lend-Lease To Take Quarter of 1943 Food

By Francis J. Connor
Washington Bureau Chicago Sun

A quarter of the Nation's 1943 food production will be purchased by the Government for equal distribution between American armed forces and this country's lend-lease commitments, Secretary of Agriculture Claude R. Wickard estimated yesterday.

The Food Administrator lauded lend-lease, and urged its continuance as an instrument which has kept Great Britain in the war and a medium without which Russia "would almost surely have to stop fighting."

He appeared before the House Foreign Affairs Committee, and strongly urged that lend-lease operation be kept alive even though, he said:

"I want to tell you frankly that from now on we are going to feel the pinch at home more than we have in the past as we keep on sending food to the Allies."

U. S. to Take More Food

He disclosed before the committee that one-eighth of the 1942 food production was absorbed by Government purchase, and said this figure will be doubled in the coming year. Wickard revealed that 56 per cent of the food bought by the Government last year went to the armed services, and 44 per cent to lend-lease operations. This year, however, Wickard expressed the expectation that Federally allotted food to the American Army and lend-lease commitments would be equally allocated.

Wickard said that American food is keeping Russia in the war and contributing to the victories of the Soviet army.

"It is the men—Russian men—who are winning the all-important battle there," he said. "But if the supplies of American food which are going to these men, fraction though it is of the total supply, were to be cut off tomorrow, they would almost surely have to stop fighting."

"To me it is highly significant," he said, "that in the last few months our shipments to Russia have been greatly increased. In December, for the first time, we shipped more to Russia than to Great Britain. I submit to you that food, along with the other war materials that we have been sending to the Russians, has paid magnificent dividends. Its importance is indicated by the fact that the Russians are giving food top priority in shipping at this time."

The Secretary said Russia had not asked for any appreciable help in feeding her civilian populations.

"Only the merest driblets of lend-lease food have gone for that purpose. Practically all the food we send goes right to the soldiers of the Red army.

"The civilian rations in Russia have been cut to the bone. Black bread is the mainstay, and only the heaviest workers get more than a pound of it a day. Meat is no longer thought of as a regular food, but as an occasional treat. Cereal, fats and sugar are portioned out, depending on the sort of work a civilian is doing, at the minimum rates necessary to sustenance."

2 Held in Slaying Of Maryland Worker

Havre De Grace, Md., Feb. 4 (AP). State Police Lieut. Charles B. Durham said today two men were being held pending completion of an investigation into the death yesterday of Harry Bryner, 57, of Wilkes-Barre, Pa.

Bryner died in the Harford Memorial Hospital, Havre De Grace, from severe head injuries, Durham reported. The officer said the two men were fellow construction workers of Bryner's at the Bainbridge Naval Training Station.

Manager Jailed For Interrupting Telephone Service

Jefferson, Iowa, Feb. 4 (AP).—Carl H. Daubendiek, manager of the Jefferson Telephone Co., was sentenced today to spend 90 days in the Greene County jail and was fined $500 for interrupting telephone service. He was convicted last Saturday of failing to transmit telephone messages for two hours because of an argument with his rationing board over gasoline for an automobile he claimed was needed in the business.

Witnesses testified the telephone manager told them "no gas, no telephone service."

Army Asks Police To Turn Over All Confiscated Guns

Baltimore, Feb. 4 (AP).—Guns once used to break the law will be turned to the defense of the United States, the Third Service Command announced today.

Maj. Gen. Milton A. Reckord, whose command includes the States of Maryland, Virginia and Pennsylvania, said he had asked law-enorcement agencies in the three States to turn over to the Army all confiscated weapons.

The original request was made by the provost marshal general of the Army, General Reckord said.

Firearms no longer needed as evidence should be contributed, General Reckord said in letters addressed to State's attorneys, mayors, chiefs of police, State police, sheriffs and other law-enforcement officials in the Third Service Command.

"Production, Production -and More Production!"

GENERAL MOTORS REPORTS ON ITS FIRST FULL YEAR OF WAR ACTIVITIES

FIRST, AN APPRECIATION . . .

While the figures and statistics shown below are impressive, they do not tell the full story. They do not show, for example, the cooperation we have had from Army and Navy officials at every step of our progress toward the record production already achieved. Nor do they indicate the fine spirit of cooperation shown by our suppliers and subcontractors, on whom we rely for so much of the work.

They cannot convey an adequate picture of the eagerness of hundreds of thousands of General Motors men and women to back the courage and determination of our fighting men with an ample supply of the most effective fighting weapons in the world. They cannot give even a hint of the initiative displayed by our engineers and mass-production technicians in effecting manufacturing economies and efficiencies which have resulted in the saving of critical war materials and manpower, and which have already made possible price reductions amounting to hundreds of millions of dollars.

These are the practical results that come from encouraging individual effort and initiative—the American way of getting the job done. Machines alone cannot win the victory—it will be won by free men working and fighting together for the only kind of future worthy of America.

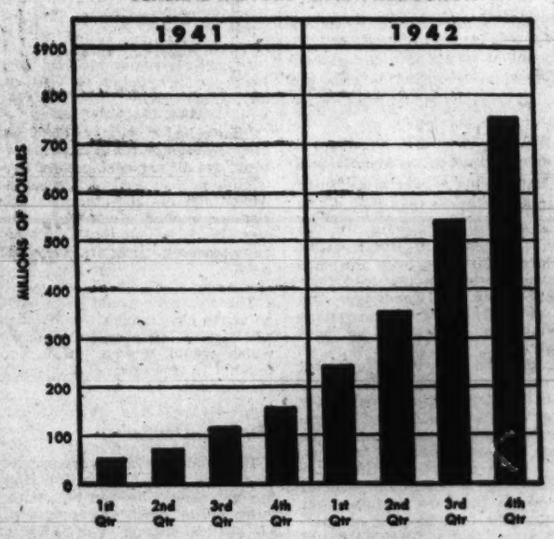
1940 and 1941 were years of defense production and of planning for the possibility of war. Pearl Harbor found this defense production well under way. With the declaration of war and the call for "all-out" war effort, General Motors concentrated its entire organization and all its facilities on war production.

The tremendous job ahead at the threshold of 1942 called for the "know-how" of all our engineers, designers, mechanics and managers, skilled and experienced in mass production. It required the retooling and rearranging of all our plants for maximum production of war products. It meant designing and building new machines, and tools to make them—training skilled hands to perform new tasks, and teaching the unskilled—building employment and payrolls to unprecedented peaks—organizing and enlisting the support of our network of thousands of suppliers and subcontractors. It also meant establishing and operating training schools to teach thousands of men in the armed forces how to properly service and maintain General Motors-built war equipment.

Now at the beginning of 1943 these basic tasks have all been accomplished, and during their accomplishment General Motors plants made and delivered a mighty, rising tide of war materials. That tide continues to rise with mass-production technique swinging into full stride.

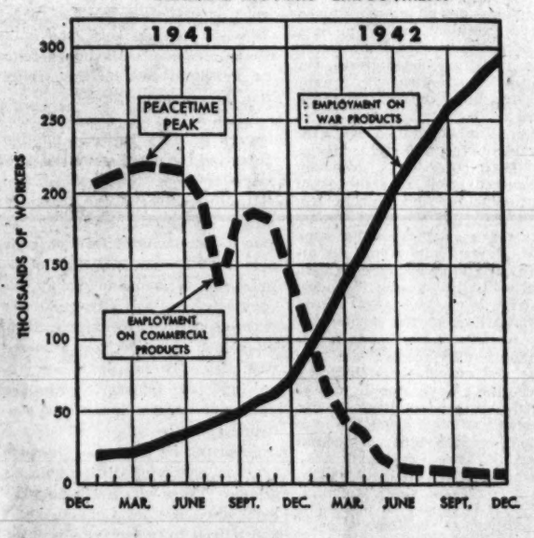
Thus General Motors answers our government's call for "Production, production—and more production!"

GENERAL MOTORS' WAR PRODUCTION



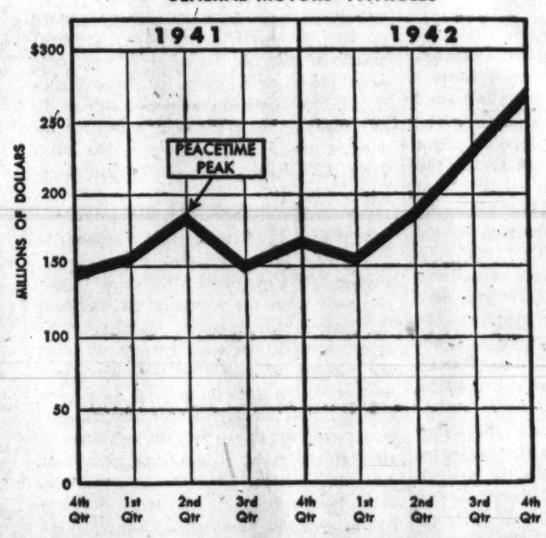
We regret that for military reasons we cannot report the number of guns, tanks, planes, shells, armored cars, trucks, Diesel engines for submarines and other uses, airplane instruments and hundreds of other items made and delivered by General Motors. We can say that in dollar value they totaled approximately $1,900,000,000—almost two billion dollars—in the year 1942 alone.

GENERAL MOTORS' EMPLOYMENT



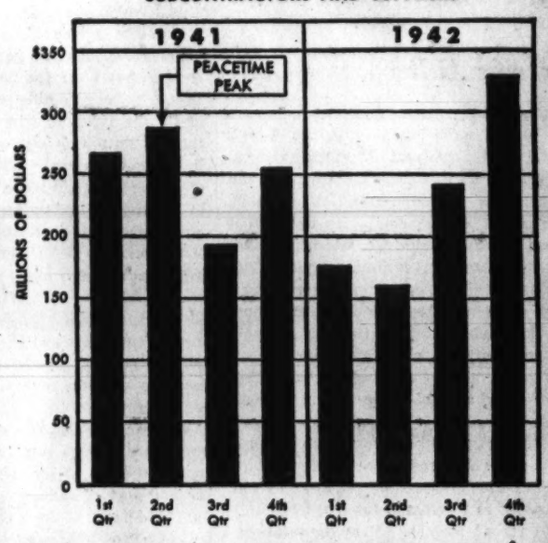
In June 1941, factory employment was 250,000—an all-time high. Since then, 50,000 replacements have been made, largely to replace men who have gone into the armed services, and 49,000 additional employes have been hired. To the 54,000 salaried workers employed in June 1941, 17,000 have been added. At the end of 1942 General Motors' employment reached 370,000—66,000 above the previous peak. It is anticipated that 100,000 will be added.

GENERAL MOTORS' PAYROLLS



General Motors' payrolls, like General Motors' employment figures, are at an all-time high in our 105 plants in 46 communities and 13 states—and five plants in Canada. The December 1942 payroll was $88,000,000. This was 45% more than the peacetime peak in June 1941. The total General Motors payroll for 1942 was $839,000,000—28% more than in 1941—the highest previous year.

GENERAL MOTORS' PURCHASES FROM SUBCONTRACTORS AND SUPPLIERS



The fastest, most effective way to distribute war work among the greatest number of producers is primarily through larger industrial organizations who have technical staffs available and who are accustomed to working with suppliers and subcontractors. Purchases from subcontractors and suppliers in the fourth quarter of 1942 were $330,000,000, compared with the peacetime peak of $288,000,000 in the second quarter of 1941.

War on U-Boats

This week's R. A. F. raids on Cologne and Hamburg, last week's raid by the United States Army Air Force on Wilhelmshaven and Emden, and the frequent sweeps carried out by Allied fighters and light bombers over German bases on the French coast constitute no isolated developments. Each of those raids formed part of a carefully worked-out program of action in connection with the war on the U-boats.

It is no secret that Hitler regards the U-boat as his best as well as his last card. He is convinced that through a stepping-up of U-boat warfare he can paralyze the Allies, prevent them from moving the mounting output of war materiel from their factories to the fighting fronts, and thus gain time for Germany to build up Europe as an impregnable fortress. To that end submarine construction now receives No. 1 priorities in the Reich, and a submarine expert has just been named commander in chief of the German fleet in place of Grand Admiral Raeder.

The submarine is without question our greatest danger. Thus far we have achieved only local successes in combating that menace. The over-all situation looks black. We lack sufficient escort vessels to do a thorough job of convoying. Our ship construction, to be sure, is encouragingly on the increase, but it is an open question whether we can, in that fashion, overcome the U-boat evil. For even if we build more ships than are sunk, every ship that is sunk means a loss of many man-hours of labor and valuable cargoes. What must, above all, be done is to fight the U-boat at source, to fight it before it gets to sea, while it is still in harbor or, even better, while it is still in the construction stage.

It is for this reason that the present systematic and unrelenting aerial assault on German centers where submarines or vital parts are manufactured and assembled is of such first-rate importance. For it is only by keeping down the construction of U-boats during the next months that we shall win sufficient time to catch up on construction both of merchant craft and escort vessels and thus enjoy a margin of tonnage to enable us to carry out our ambitious offensive plans without a hitch.

Nurse's Aides

Announcement that Red Cross nurse's aides are to serve hereafter in the Army's general station hospitals is official vindication of the work of a corps for which civilian patients have already sung loud praises. Moreover, it should emphasize again that the Nation's nurse shortage, which is frighteningly apparent in our own Capital City, must be alleviated by broad and sweeping action. The recent decision allowing nonprofit hospitals to adjust the pay of their employes without obtaining War Labor Board approval was one step in this direction. For, as applied to nurses, it will encourage experienced personnel to stick at their jobs and attract newcomers to the profession. The fine results of mixing volunteer aides with graduate nurses are only too well known to those who have had hospital care in recent months. Many hospital superintendents are quick to say that they could not begin to serve the community without the assistance of these aides. Use of them now in Army hospitals in the United States, Alaska, the Canal Zone, Hawaii, Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands should prove invaluable in spreading the skills of graduate nurses.

Ring Around Rostov

With the capture of Kagalnitskaya on the railroad joining Salsk and Rostov, the Red army has now reached a point only 30 miles from the latter city. Other Russian columns are now 56 miles east and 70 miles north of Rostov. So the circle on that Don city, the gateway to the Caucasus, is steadily being narrowed, and the plight of the German forces east and southeast of Rostov steadily grows worse.

Indeed, it is not too much to say that a German disaster of the magnitude of the Stalingrad debacle now appears to be in the making. London military observers are convinced that the fall of Rostov may occur in a matter of days. Be that as it may, the fact is that the Russian offensive which began in the middle of November is now achieving very considerable momentum. Rostov is only one of several vital Nazi strong points now menaced by the Red drive. Others are Kharkov and Kursk, whose loss would endanger the Nazi hold on the Ukraine, and Krasnodor in the Kuban region, where a considerable German force now faces entrapment.

The speed of the Russian advance in the Caucasus and along the Don bend suggests that, though belatedly, a general German retreat has been ordered from much of the region overrun by the German armies in the summer of 1942. And the farther the Russians move to the west—at one point they are now 300 miles west of Stalingrad—the more unlikely it is that the Germans will next year be able to mount a major offensive on the Eastern Front.

Work Or Fight

Manpower Chief McNutt's work-or-fight order is raising a furor largely because it distorts an act of Congress and makes compulsory service in the armed forces a punishment for failure to obey an executive edict. When Congress passed the Selective Service Act, its purpose was only to raise men for the Army and Navy in the fairest possible way consistent with the national interest. We faced no manpower shortage at that time. Congress authorized the President to defer the drafting of men whose continued employment in their usual occupations is necessary to the maintenance of the national health, safety, or interest. It also provided for the deferment of men with dependents. There is, however, no specific grant of authority to force men with families to change their jobs under penalty of being drafted.

Mr. McNutt and the Selective Service System are thus using the great power entrusted to their hands to accomplish a purpose never approved by Congress. In this respect the current instructions to draft boards are of a piece with the executive order creating the WMC. That order gave Mr. McNutt indirect control over every man's job. He may direct that all hiring be done through the United States Employment Service and that workers be transferred from plant to plant with or without their consent. To be sure, the WMC has no direct means of enforcing such orders, for Congress has not legislated on the subject. But its edicts may be enforced indirectly by threats to take over the plants of employers who refuse to fire workers disobeying WMC orders.

We have thus acquired a sort of hit-or-miss national service system through the abuse of powers that Congress has granted for other purposes. The Post has long believed that the Administration should have the power, in this period of total war, to place every able-bodied man in the post where he can serve his country most effectively. But we don't believe that any such policy should be initiated by executive decree. Nor do we favor a policy that is so indirect and discriminatory as the WMC work-or-fight order, regardless of what its legal background might be.

The work-or-fight order falls woefully short of giving us an adequate system of wartime service. It contains no guaranty that men will be carefully selected for jobs where their talents would be most useful. On the contrary, men with families are to be herded into "essential" industries, with or without the guidance of the Employment Service. Some of the industries to which they may go will soon be declared "nonessential" so that further moves will probably have to be made.

No less serious is the discrimination against men under 38 years of age. Military service has been limited to men between 18 and 38 because only this group is deemed fit for the rigors of front-line fighting. But there is no reason whatever for placing the limit for compulsory war work at 38. Out of simple justice to those who bear the brunt of the battle the burden of war service on the home front should be extended to men above military age. Indeed, it would be wholly reasonable to start with compulsory home-front service on the part of men over 38 because of their greater experience in their occupations and their exemption from military service. Certainly it doesn't make sense to exclude them from any national service system.

We fear also that the effect of this order on morale may be bad. Men should not be sent to the armed services as a punishment for any sort of failure or misconduct. To fight in defense of one's country is a solemn obligation on every citizen. The Government cannot impose such service on citizens as a punishment without minimizing, by implication, the patriotic devotion of millions who are risking their lives for the national safety.

When the shortcomings of the work-or-fight order are summarized, it is difficult to escape the conclusion that the WMC is taking this means of covering up its failure to work out a satisfactory manpower policy. Absenteeism, comparatively short hours of work, overstaffing, and a high turnover of employes in many plants are creating an artificial manpower shortage. The WMC is trying feebly to stop this inexcusable wastage of human energy, but without much success to date, as its job-freeze order of yesterday indicated. Under heavy pressure to do something, it has turned to another expedient that is likely to produce more irritation than war equipment.

The most hopeful aspect of the order is that it will probably spur Congress to action. By this move the Administration has admitted the necessity of a national service act. As the shortage of civilians to carry on war work becomes more acute, the need for placement of every man where he can serve best can no longer be questioned. No halfway measure indirectly put into effect by executive decree will serve the purpose. The responsibility is now upon Congress to adopt a fair and straightforward manpower policy consistent with the demands of total war. The way in which Congress responds to that obligation will be one of the most severe tests of its ability to regain its rightful place as our chief policymaking body.

Invasion: Where?

At his press conference on Tuesday President Roosevelt gave out a very broad hint that one of the agreements reached at the Casablanca conference was to invade the European continent in 1943. In one sense this is so obvious that it hardly needs any underlining. For the present operations in Tunisia as well as the campaigns that led up to them all point to the ultimate use of Africa as a springboard for an attack on the heart of Axis strength.

Where, however, will Europe be invaded? The exact place or places must, of course, remain a military secret. As Hitler and his generals now bitterly realize, the Allies suffer from no lack of alternatives. Every part of the European coast line from the North Cape all the way around to the Aegean is now or may soon be vulnerable to Allied attack. It would seem that a foray into Norway must be in the cards for the double purpose of encouraging the resistance in Norway and of enticing the Germans into Sweden. The Axis cannot dismiss any possibility as too fantastic—an attack on Norway or a thrust through the Low Countries or France or an invasion by way of southern France or Italy or the Balkans. Once the Axis has been driven out of Tunisia, the initiative will rest with the Allies. So Hitler will be up against the dour necessity of having to distribute his shrinking forces among many points even while carrying out a rear-guard action on the Eastern Front.

Even today the Nazi leaders find themselves forced to admit to the German people that the Reich lacks the strength to combat all its enemies with equal force at once. Thus Field Marshal Goering in his speech of last Saturday sought to explain why there has been practically no retaliation for the devastating raids by the R. A. F. on German cities by saying: "Why don't we retaliate? Do not forget, compatriots, that we have an enormous theater of war. The bulk of power of the German Luftwaffe fights in the south and in the east and in the north."

Goering went on to say that it was his "most fervent conviction" that "this battle in the east . . . will one day come to an end, when the last power of Bolshevik resistance has been broken." But nothing that is happening on the Eastern Front suggests that this day is at hand or will ever come. In the meantime there rises, with increasing certainty, the dread possibility that in addition to having to fight in Russia and in Africa, the Wehrmacht will soon have to fight in western or southern Europe as well. The fact that neither Goering nor Goebbels, nor Hitler in his proclamation, for that matter, mentioned the possibility of a second land front in Europe even to scoff at it shows how close to Nazi consciousness that possibility is. And in this respect the Casablanca and Adana meetings will add nothing to the German peace of mind.

Air Fatalities

Senator Maybank's search for information regarding the causes of fatal air accidents involving Army planes has brought a very interesting reply from Assistant Secretary of War Lovett. During the first eight months of 1942, Mr. Lovett says 74 per cent more hours were flown by Army planes than in the whole 10-year period 1930-40. In face of this extraordinary expansion in mileage, the accident rate per 1000 miles flown was slightly below the 10-year peacetime average.

For certain purposes it is unquestionably enlightening to relate accident frequency to flying hours. But such comparisons do not answer the questions that are really pertinent from the viewpoint of members of Congress and relatives of men in the flying services; namely, how many men are victims of accidents and what percentage of the men in training have been involved in accidents? Comparisons with the records of 1930-40 are without relevance in view of the great strides that have been made in aviation. This progress permits much longer flights to be made with less risk of accidents resulting from mechanical defects. On the other hand it is to be expected that the accident rate will rise rapidly in wartime, because risks have to be taken that would not be permitted in normal times.

Congress and the public are entitled to a frank statement of the actual frequency and causes of accidents for the purpose of correcting impressions gained from isolated newspaper reports. Armed with such information they would then find it possible to form an opinion as to whether the accident rate is excessive and whether steps could be taken to reduce it without impairment of our war effort. Concealment of pertinent facts will only fan the flame of criticism and increase the growing concern of the civilian population.

AUGUST NIGHT

Wide-open windows swell with sound,
The traffic crashes where we sit.
The heat is over-ripe and round,
The purple plum of night has split.

Upon a sweating hand a stone
Stars its motion glacier-blue,
A frost point holding out alone
Against that wilting human dew.

No other chill relieves the room
Except a candle, milky-cool
White drop upon the sleeve of gloom,
White pebble wavering in a pool.

Limit On Salaries

By Mark Sullivan

Steps To Undo It

THE $25,000 LIMIT on salaries, in its immediate stage, is an issue between the President and Congress—whether the President, in decreeing the limit by executive order, trespassed on the legislative function of Congress. Much of Congress, including some of the ablest leaders in both parties, thinks the President did trespass. They are strongly disposed to assert the power of Congress by specifically legislating the limit out of existence. Steps toward that end have been taken have been temporarily checked, and are about to be resumed.

The history of the issue, as between the President and Congress, began last April. Mr. Roosevelt, in a message to Congress, calling for a legislative program to combat inflation, alluded to a $25,000 limit on salaries as something desirable. He said:

". . . in time of this grave national danger, when all excess income should go to win the war, no American citizen ought to have a net income, after he has paid his taxes, of more than $25,000."

WHEN COMMITTEES of Congress came to write the anti-inflation bill they considered the President's suggestion—and rejected it, specifically and deliberately. They wrote the bill in such a way that—as was stated at the time—the language would not give the President latitude to decree the $25,000 salary limit.

The bill became law October 2, last. The following day Mr. Roosevelt issued an executive order decreeing, among other provisions, the $25,000 salary limit.

At once arose outcry—questioning the President's authority, and questioning the merit of such a salary limit. The White House stood pat—and went further. Mrs. Roosevelt at a press conference said the limit ought to be put not only on salaries but on income from investments. A factor in the present acrimony is the fact that Mrs. Roosevelt occasionally seems to take relish from rather flouting Congress. Mr. Roosevelt in his budget message to Congress last month formally recommended that the limit be extended to cover income from investments.

Meanwhile an election had taken place in which the President's party lost many seats in Congress. The new Congress felt that a large reason for the defeat of Administration members had been popular protest against surrender of power by Congress to the President. The new Congress was consciously bent upon guarding its legislative function—not giving more power to the President, and taking back, so far as practicable, some powers that had already been given. Out of this spirit arose the present steps to undo the $25,000 salary limit.

On fundamental merit, the arguments for the limit are largely fallacious. Mr. Roosevelt recommended it as a means of getting more revenue "to win the war." But the total amount thus taken away from the some 3000 persons who would be affected, would be extremely small, relative to the whole. Besides, analysis has shown that as the technicalities of the income-tax law work out—as between individuals who receive the salaries and corporations that pay them—the Government would actually get more money if the salaries continued.

Another frequent argument says that, since the Administration puts a limit on the wartime rise in wages of workers in industry, it is proper to put limit on salaries to business executives. The fallacy here is that as to workers, the Government merely checks a wartime raise—while as to executives, the Government reduces salaries already existing.

YET another argument says that in England the income-tax law is such that practically nobody gets more than $25,000 a year. But an English income-tax law, legislated by Parliament, applicable to everybody, and working out to this result, is one thing. An American presidential decree singling out a group arbitrarily, and arbitrarily reducing their incomes, is a different thing.

Probably it is safe to conclude that in large part the limit was put forward as a political gesture to labor. It was endorsed by C. I. O.

The limit has one direct consequence adverse to the public interest in a fundamental way. It will prevent many contributions to such institutions as hospitals, colleges and the like, now made by persons having large incomes. To the extent that privates institutions are thus handicapped, there arises a tendency for such services to be performed by Government. To drive such institutions into Government is a tenet of totalitarian government, which is jealous of private institutions and says, "There should be nothing in the state that is not of the state."

The U-Boat Challenge

By Paul Schubert

German Hopes For 1943

THE ELEVATION of German Admiral Karl Doenitz to the supreme command of the Reich's naval forces is eloquent testimony as to German naval plans for 1943. Doenitz is a submarine man. By naming a U-boat specialist to be head of a German navy at war, Hitler proclaims two things: (1) The U-boat service is the only branch of the German navy which has been at all effective, and (2) the German naval warfare of 1943 is to revolve about U-boat operations—all else is subordinate to the submarine.

The submarine is a negative weapon. It is not a ship with which "command of the sea" can be fought for and won, for the simple reason that the submarine is not—and cannot be—built to stand up and fight. Almost all other naval vessels have inherent combat superiority over the submarine—the submarine's "box score" in combat with naval vessels is astonishingly low. Even the frail aircraft causes the submarine to dive. This is because the submarine's armor is too light to permit her to duel with guns—the cost of a hole in the hull is the loss of her ability to dive . . . and that means almost certain doom.

No amount of U-boats will give Germany "command" of the Atlantic—that is, the power to move German ships abroad, and reestablish contact with the world beyond Europe.

NOR WILL the German U-boat have marked effect upon the naval strength of the United Nations. To repeat, only seldom do U-boats sink men-of-war. They have, in fact, little interest in men-of-war as targets.

The strength of the U-boat lies in its ability to sink merchant tonnage. The merchantman, unarmored, thin-hulled, with broad belly divided into huge holds, slow of speed and clumsy in maneuver—the merchantman offers the U-boat a much easier target. The merchantman is able to do little in self-defense—the merchantman's gun is really only there to keep the submarine "under" and give the slow cargo carrier a slight break in the tragic circumstances of being forced to drop out of convoy at sea.

U-boat operators at their strongest and most effective sink only a percentage of the United Nations merchant tonnage in the Atlantic. The amount sunk is directly proportional to the amount and efficiency of the convoy protection which the Royal Navy, the Royal Canadian Navy, and the United States Navy are able to provide. A given number of naval vessels can give 100 per cent protection—no losses at all—to a certain tonnage of merchant shipping. We see this in our ability to move troop transports literally without loss. But the greater the sea freight movement, the less the protection that can be given to each individual ship.

The object of U-boat operations has never been to sink all our ships. It has never been to "command" the sea. When Germany fights a war it is instinctive for Germans to think in terms of Germany's armies—it is almost an axiom that the Germans do not understand sea power, and the course of the present war will probably show that they do not understand air power any better. German military might is army power.

And the object of the German U-boat campaign is to bottleneck the military power that can be moved across the Atlantic to the European combat theater (including the Russian front)—to keep the American Army in Europe down to a size at which the German army can "deal" with it, and equally to bottleneck the equipment we send to the British Isles and Russia and the Free French.

The Germans are going to all-out U-boat warfare in 1943 because they know this is the critical year for the German army—the year in which the tide of United Nations military strength threatens to rise high enough to engulf and overwhelm the German army. That, to Germany, means the long-dreaded military defeat.

Almost exactly the same line of "naval" thinking was followed by Germany in 1917 and 1918.

ALL-OUT dependence upon submarine effectiveness seemed justified then, and it seems justified now. A good statistical case can be made out to prove that the U-boat will do what Germany expects of it. It is on this case that Admiral Doenitz's appointment is based.

But in 1917 and 1918, the hard-pressed navies of Britain and America were able to rise to the occasion and give the convoys protection good enough to build up Allied armies able to crush Germany.

The U-boat warfare of 1943 will not be decided by Germany's U-boats alone. The other determining factor is the strength and efficiency of our convoy protection. And our factor is positive, not negative.

Madison's Comment

In No. 19 of the Federalist papers James Madison gives a brief sketch of "ancient confederacies," and "existing institutions, founded on a similar principle" of which "the first that presents itself is the Germanic body." Having sketched its evolution and its then condition, he goes on to say.:

"The history of Germany is a history of wars between the Emperor and the princes and states; of wars between the princes and states themselves; of the licentiousness of the strong and the oppression of the weak; of foreign intrusions, and foreign intrigues; of requisitions of men and money disregarded or partially complied with; of attempts to enforce them, altogether abortive, or attended with slaughter and desolation, involving the innocent with the guilty; of general imbecility, confusion and misery."

Receiving its flower in 160-some years in one Adolf Hitler Shickelgruber! Those who are to make up the United Nations Council might find it well to memorize this brief analysis of an American gifted with the prophet's vision. Present events seem to write Q. E. D. at the end of Madison's conclusions.

'Boycott Argentina?'

It was with tremendous interest and enthusiasm that I read an editorial in The Post on January 28, entitled "Boycott Argentina?" My interest stems from a long-time interest in inter-American affairs while the enthusiasm springs from the fact that I have just returned from a nine months' stay in Buenos Aires as a scholarship student at the Universidad Nacionale de Buenos Aires. My scholarship was one of the exchange ones from the coordinator's office administered by the Institute of International Education, and also I was fortunate enough to have the Pan American Airways Travel Fellowship to Argentina for 1942.

The editorial under discussion apparently was written by one who understands the Argentines better than most North Americans. My hope is that everyone who saw the editorial will read and reread it until all are impressed that this is the only way we can hope for real economic and social understanding with Argentina both now and in the postwar setup.

NANCY C. NESBIT.

Fixed Obligations

In all the discussions that I have heard, and all of the articles I have read on the subject of income taxes, there has never been any consideration given to a sliding scale of taxation, based on the amount of salary or wages earned in 1942, as compared to earnings of that same individual two or even three years previously.

We all know that earnings of people engaged in the manufacture of implements of war are earning a great deal more than they did in 1939 or 1940. Yet there are millions of pepole in the so-called "white collar" class who are earning no more than they did four, five, or even eight years ago. And in spite of this fact, the percentage of taxation is identical for both classes.

Those who enjoy vastly increased earnings through war work should be in a better position to pay heavy taxes because their fixed obligations are unlikely to be so high as those of sales people, teachers, etc. Many of these in the latter classification have purchased homes for which they are paying either through the FHA or some comparable plan. And while there would have been no difficulty in meeting payments—even with substantially higher tax rates, it does seem to me that some consideration should be given to a sliding tax rate that would take "increased earnings" into consideration. Truly, with salaries frozen, the "white collar" worker is the forgotten man of 943! LEE STEWART CRANSE.
Millburn, N. J., Jan. 31.

Hatred And The Peace

In times like these, when we are under a great emotional strain, those who conduct public forums have a responsibility which Mr. Granik should recognize. We are fighting a war in which our victory is essential to human progress. But that victory will be wasted unless it means triumph for our ideals as well as for our arms.

At a recent American Forum of the Air the keynote was struck by Quentin Reynolds. Except for a futile attempt by one member of the panel to look forward to a world in which peoples must live together, that keynote of hatred, vengeance and intolerance dominated the discussion.

Those who conduct public forums in these days of strain should phrase the subject of debate in such a way that each debater will state the results, as he sees them, of his proposals. Mere inflammation of emotion may cause us to lose the peace for which we are fighting. J. I.

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips

Possible Inflation

"Hello, how's tricks?" demanded Elmer Twitchell, who was paying 18 cents for a cigar that used to cost a nickel, and addressing Senator Dumm, who had just bought a box of headache pills for twice what they cost a year ago.

"Hello, Elmer," returned the Senator cordially.

"Keeping you pretty busy down in Washington?" asked Elmer. "Do you think we're going to have inflation?"

"I don't think so," said Senator Dumm, as he pulled on a pair of gloves worth about $1.25 which had set him back $3.98 the day before. "How about you?"

"I'm afraid we may get it in a mild form," said Elmer, as he shifted to his other arm a box of new shoes which cost him $16.50 as against the $9 he paid for the last pair.

* * * *

They left the drug store and walked down the street together.

* * * *

"There's always a chance of inflation, but I feel that we will avoid it in America," continued the Senator. "By the way I think I'll drop in here and get a shave."

"They charge 75 cents for it in there," said Elmer. "There's a shop further on where you can get one for 60."

"As I was saying," resumed the Senator, "we are spending a lot of money and we will have to be smart to avoid inflation, but I have every confidence we will do so."

* * * *

Here they attempted to cross a street and were knocked back by a milk wagon delivering the same milk for 18 cents a quart that cost only 12 not long ago.

* * * *

"We can avoid it if we are constantly on guard, I suppose," chirped Elmer, as he stopped and paid 15 cents for an apple from a vender who had once made money by selling them for a nickel.

"Other countries did not take proper preventive measures and so inflation engulfed 'em. We are alert, I am sure," argued Senator Dumm as he dodged a barrel of beer being rolled into a cafe where a glass half the size of the old-fashioned 5-cent schooner would be passed out for 15.

"I guess this country sees the danger and has taken steps in time," agreed Elmer, as he stopped to adjust his necktie by his reflection in a window full of eggs selling at about 6 cents each.

"Quite so," nodded Senator Dumm, as they came to Gilhooley's cafe and entered.

* * * *

They each ordered a rye highball.

The bartender rang up a check for $1.20.

"Of course it may engulf us before we realize it," admitted Elmer, as they paid, and left.

"Yes, there's always a chance," admitted the Senator.

FUROR

"There's terrific excitement in Washington," said Elmer Twitchell today.

"What about?" we asked.

"There's a rumor Mr. and Mrs. Roosevelt are going to visit the city," he replied.

* * * *

"If we had a decrease of 50 per cent in absenteeism in factories we could get 10 per cent greater production of war needs. The largest percentage of absenteeism is in airplane shops. Much of it is on Mondays and is attributed to Monday morning sickness."—Donald Nelson.

* * * *

The only cure would seem to be an alarm clock which would touch off, instead of a bell, a record which would scream, "Hey, you fellah! In Guadalcanal they work Mondays!"

Postwar Danger

The opinions which are expressed by writers, from time to time, that the war should be won before the terms of settlement are canvassed, are not convincing. The "Atlantic Charter," formulated by Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Churchill was not only intended as an assurance to the warring nations as to the humane objectives of England and the United States but it was an invitation to the people to keep those objectives in mind, and develop them by discussion. Winning the war completely is undoubtedly the foremost consideration, but it seems logical and sound to accompany that fundamental consideration by the parallel secondary consideration of the terms, or principles, of settlement.

May I suggest that one of the subjects which will need the most mature consideration, when the war is over, and Germany is in position to approach England and the United States through the channel of a decent representation, will be how to safeguard Germany and the world from the danger of again falling into the hands and power of militarism within Germany?

There will be little danger from the present militarists. They will be satiated of war. But in 15 or 20 years there will be enough men of military age who have taken no part in this war, and received but little education from its horrors, to form another war machine almost as strong as that which now tyrannizes Germany and disturbs the peace of the world. How is that danger to be eliminated and injustice averted, in the settlement?

Turkey And The War

By Ernest Lindley

May Soon Become Fighting Ally

PRIME MINISTER Churchill has cautioned observers against seeing more in his meeting with President Inonu of Turkey than appeared on the surface. Officially Turkish sources state that the Turkish government did not make any commitment to enter the war and was not asked to.

LINDLEY

This meeting could not have occurred, however, if the Turks had not reached a critical decision: that Germany will not win the war. For Mr. Churchill did not go to Turkey on a simple good will visit or for strictly diplomatic purposes. Members of the British General Staff went with him, and they conferred with the heads of the Turkish General Staff. No effort was made to deny that the conference was held for essential military purposes. On the contrary, this was openly avowed.

The Turks are a shrewd people. For a year and a half beginning with the German thrust through the Balkans to the Black and Aegean seas and the European border of Turkey, the Turks were dangerously exposed. First the Axis lunge at Syria and Iraq and then the colossal offensive in Russia, which carried to the Caucasus mountains, coupled with Rommel's drive into Egypt, threatened to surround Turkey. Even now, with the Germans in Crete, Greece, Bulgaria, Rumania, and southern Russia, including the Crimea, it is a half-enveloped salient. The Turks want all the help they can get in defending their land in the event of a German attack. But they would hardly have flaunted a provocation to the Germans, by holding open military consultations with Mr. Churchill and the British General Staff, if they had not decided that the aid obtainable from the Allies could be really effective.

AS TO the sympathies of the Turks there has never been any doubt. They are a sturdy and fiercely independent people. They have been formally allied with Great Britain since 1939. But the substance began to leak out of the alliance in 1940 with the fall of France even before the Mediterranean was finally closed in the spring of 1941. Now the Turks can see not only that the European Axis has begun to weaken, and that it is being forced back in Russia, but that the Western Allies have made the reopening of the Mediterranean the objective of their first major counter offensive.

The next step in reclaiming the Mediterranean must be the ejection of the Axis from Tunisia. After that, to make the passage reasonably secure, some of the Mediterranean islands will need be recaptured, or the air and naval forces based on them beaten down.

THE GERMANS apparently think that British-American plans call for the early recapture of Crete and the Italian-held Dodecanese and other Aegean islands. Such a campaign could serve simultaneously two purposes. One is the reopening of the water route into the Black Sea, making possible the supplying of the Russian forces, at least in the south, by a relatively short route. In such an operation Turkey would be directly involved, since it controls the Dardanelles, and the Germans might be expected to counter any effort to open the Dardanelles and Straits of Bosphorous to Allied shipping by an overland attack from Bulgaria and Greece.

The second possible purpose of such an Allied campaign would be to open the way for the landing of forces on the Balkan Peninsula for a major counter-offensive in the northeasterly direction into the heart of Europe. The Vardar Valley, extending from the vicinity of Salonika up into the heart of Yugoslavia, is a relatively straight and broad route, the practicability of which has been proven often in the past. A successful advance along this route would liberate fighting Allies and pinch German communications with the southern Russian front.

Any major British-American offensive at the eastern end of the Mediterranean is likely to result eventually in Turkey's entry into the war. War may be forced on Turkey by a German counter move; or, if an Allied offensive began to succeed, by Turkey's voluntary declaration of war. The fighting Allies will be the principal partners in the reorganization of Europe—if, indeed, those who don't fight are consulted at all. The Turks must be credited with the horse sense to enter the war as a fighting ally. Why they have not done so already is sympathetically understood by Britain, as Mr. Churchill implied, and by the United States. And, everything considered, the Allied cause probably has benefited more to date from Turkey's friendly neutrality than it would have done with Turkey as a fighting partner. The time may not be far away, however, when by entering the war, Turkey can measurably shorten it. This moment will be made clear by events; and the Turks presumably will not need to be pressed to seize the opportunity when it arrives.

Your Federal Income Tax
No. 26
Methods Of Accounting

A Federal income tax return may be prepared in accordance with any method of accounting regularly used by the taxpayer which correctly reflects his income and expenditures. Two main methods of keeping accounts are followed, (a) the cash receipts and disbursements method, and (b) the accrual method. In the cash receipts and disbursements method all items of income actually or constructively received (whether in cash or property or services), and only those amounts actually paid out for deductible expenses, are shown. Income is "constructively" received when the amount is credited to the account of, or set apart for, the taxpayer, and may be drawn upon by him at any time. Thus, under the cash receipts and disbursements method, a bill rendered by the taxpayer would not constitute income until paid, nor would a bill rendered to the taxpayer be expense until paid. There would, however, be constructive receipt of a payment if a valid check is received during the taxable year, even though the check may not have been deposited or cashed within that period.

Under the accrual method, net income is measured in a broad sense by the excess of income earned over expenses incurred. Under the accrual method, income arises when earned, even though not received, and deductible expenses arise when incurred whether paid or not within the taxable period.

Where inventories are carried in the business, as in the case of store operations, only the accrual method in reporting purchases and sales will clearly reflect income, and the accrual method accordingly should be used. In the case of a professional occupation, such as that of a lawyer or physician, where inventories are not employed, either the cash receipts and disbursements method or the accrual method may be employed.

Business expenses must be distinguished from capital expenditures. Capital expenditures are those which result in the acquisition of something of a permanent nature and do not constitute the current cost of running a business, and, therefore, are not deductible as business expenses. While a distinction between a capital expenditure and a business expense is often difficult to draw, a general rule may be stated applicable in most cases: Capital expenditures ordinarily result in the acquisition of assets having periods of useful life in excess of one year. Where the period of useful life is one year or less, that is, where the asset is worn out and discarded within one year from its purchase, the entire cost is deductible from the income for that year.

A limitation upon the deductibility of items as business expenses is that they must be paid or incurred within the taxable year. If the taxpayer is on the cash receipts and disbursements basis, then the expenses must be paid within the year; if he is on the accrual method, such expenses are not allowable unless incurred within the year.

Treaty Asked To Embody Charter Ideas

Move By Gillette

By the Associated Press

Senator Gillette (Democrat) of Iowa proposed yesterday that the United Nations declaration and the Atlantic Charter on which it is based be embodied in a formal treaty.

He introduced a resolution calling upon President Roosevelt to negotiate immediately a "postwar peace charter" in order to give substance to the Atlantic Charter declarations formulated by Mr. Roosevelt and Prime Minister Churchill and subscribed to by the other United Nations.

"As it is now," Gillette explained, "there is no substantial frame to the expression of opinion in the Atlantic Charter and there is no guarantee that the declarations arrived at in that agreement will be crystallized into action after the war."

Check on Jap Propaganda

He said he also believed that a treaty would thwart Japanese propaganda that the Atlantic Charter declaration applied only to the Atlantic and not to the Pacific area.

"If a treaty were signed," he said, "its application would be worldwide. The people of Asia then would be assured they would have the same measure of security and the same right of self-determination that is promised to the rest of the world."

Some Senators have contended that the Atlantic Charter and the United Nations declaration are not binding on the United States because they are not formal treaties ratified by the Senate.

Gillette introduced his resolution independently of the Foreign Relations Committee, of which he is a member. He proposed four points to be included in the treaty. They were that the signatories:

The Four Points

1. Agree they "neither seek nor desire aggrandizements, territorial or otherwise."

2. Promise to respect and approve "the right of all people under proper opportunity to choose the form of government under which they will live" and agree to countenance the "restoration of sovereign rights and self-government to those who have been deprived of this choice."

3. "Collaborate in the formulating of a just peace, embodying formulae for postwar collaboration to maintain peace and security throughout the world."

4. Recognize the necessity for collaboration "to secure for all nations economic advancement, improved labor standards, social security, and access on fair and equal terms by all peoples to the raw materials and the international channels of the world."

Lend-Lease Puree Explodes, Found Unfit for Humans

Cleveland, Feb. 4 (AP).—More than 3000 gallons of tomato puree, declared unfit for human consumption, was dumped in Lake Erie yesterday. It was part of a 127,000-gallon stock being inspected for contamination.

Officials said the puree was sent from the Pacific Coast last fall and stored here for export under lend-lease. The 5-gallon cans began exploding in two warehouses.

"There seems to have been something wrong in the processing," an official said. "The stuff's not fit for consumption. One warehouse looks like a red Niagara Falls."

President's 'Well Done' Greets USO on Second Birthday

By the Associated Press

New York, Feb. 4.—President Roosevelt congratulated the United Service Organizations today on two years of work "well done."

The USO, the President said in a message to an anniversary luncheon, has stood for "the preservation for all our men, without regard to race, creed or color, of the moral and spiritual values of the Democratic ideals and freedoms for which they shall continue to fight until victory is won."

The text follows:

'As the USO approaches its second anniversary, we all know how cheerfully and generously the American people have given it their support, and how unitedly and effectively the USO has performed its mission.

"USO accepted a great responsibility, and has discharged it well. But more than that, it has stood for something beyond praise or price—the preservation for all our men, without regard to race, creed or color, of the moral and spiritual values of the Democratic ideals and freedoms for which they shall continue to fight until victory is won.

"On behalf of these fighting men, therefore, and of our forces behind their lines, I say to the USO, 'well done!'"

John D. Rockefeller, jr., who in an address reviewed the work of the USO, said:

"Before our work is finished, it may well be that the lives of from five to ten millions of men may have been touched by the USO. What a challenge!"

Boy, 11, Gives Up Scout Knife So Army Can Get Jap

McGregory, Ia., Feb. 4 (AP).—Jack Bachtell, 11, son of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Bachtell, heard of a request for 4-inch knives for soldiers in the southwest Pacific.

Jack, a sixth grader, loved his big scout knife, but mailed it, his favorite Christmas gift, promptly. He inclosed a couplet of his own:

"With this knife, please kill a Jap
Or cut a jungle vine,
And I will say to you, 'thanks, O pal of mine.'"

Maj. Gen. Barney M. Giles of the Fourth Air Force, San Francisco, Calif., wrote Jack:

"A long time ago, I was a boy about your age and I know it must have been a sacrifice for you to give up your knife. However, the soldier who receives it will appreciate the part you are playing in winning the war."

Dies Called 'Irresponsible, Behind the Times,' by Ickes

Secretary Ickes yesterday accused Chairman Dies (Democrat) of Texas of the House committee investigating un-American activities of "irresponsibility" and said Dies "hasn't said anything new for two or three years."

Asked at a press conference for comment on a recent speech by Dies describing some employes of Ickes' Interior Department as "being irresponsible," Ickes said "I don't see how they could be more irresponsible than Chairman Dies—and if they were, I'd have fired them long ago."

"Mr. Dies is just another case of regurgitation. When ever he wants new funds for his selfadvertising committee, he reaches into a hat and pulls out the same names. He's like the man who sticks chewing gum under the table so he can use it over and over again."

The Secretary said Dies "doesn't keep up to date" and that one woman named in Dies' most recent list as a Government employe, Miss Alice Barrows, has been off the Government payroll since last August, while another, Hugh Miller, an Interior Department attorney, had resigned some time ago and enlisted in the Army.

Praising Miller as one who preferred to enlist as a private rather than seek a commission despite his qualifications, Ickes said:

"Mr. Dies might want to rap a man like that over the knuckles, but I honor him. I think he's done more for his country than Mr. Dies."

'Live Greatly' Now, Stone Advises

Amherst, Mass., Feb. 4 (AP).—The senior class at Amherst College was advised today by Chief Justice Harlan F. Stone to "draw in inner strength from the realization that the opportunity is now at hand to live greatly; to gain from deprivation and sacrifice a discipline of body, mind and spirit, which easier times did not afford."

His suggestions were in a letter to members of the class in recognition of their dedication to him of the senior year book, The Olio. The Chief Justice, was graduated from Amherst in 1894.

Soldier Admits Trying to Blow Up Railroad Bridge

Peoria, Ill., Feb. 4 (AP).—Delmar Newdigate, former switchman for the Toledo, Peoria and Western Railroad, came back from an Army camp today and entered a surprise plea of guilty to two Federal indictments growing out of strike violence on the road early in 1942.

Newdigate, now a soldier stationed near Alexandria, Va., pleaded guilty to charges of attempting to dynamite a railroad bridge near Eureka on January 27, 1942, and unlawful possession of explosives during wartime.

Federal Judge J. Leroy Adair withheld sentence and allowed Newdigate's $2500 bond to stand "until further orders of the court."

Lengthen Passenger Train Schedules

EFFECTIVE FEB. 15, 1943

LET'S get serious about this job of winning the war. Vast quantities of war materials and thousands of troops are now being transported by rail.

To better and more efficiently move the ever-increasing production of essential materials and supplies, North Western-Union Pacific are voluntarily reducing the speed of their regular passenger trains.

We know that all civilians who find it necessary to travel will willingly adjust themselves to slightly longer schedules and, during the duration, to somewhat less travel comfort if conditions so require. Our Nation's welfare must come first at all times.

This Morning

—With Shirley Povich

Our war planners have not yet taken into account what may be the greatest single force for bringing hostilities to a speedy conclusion, it seems. Still on the sidelines, awaiting a call to duty is Bucky Harris, a man with a tremendous talent for stopping things.

POVICH

Harris tells the story on himself, "I had caught on with Norfolk as a shortstop in 1917 and was going great when war came and the league folded leaving me without a job. Reading took me on later in the year, but in a couple of months Reading surrendered its franchise on account of the war and I was out of a job again.

"Buffalo of the International League was losing a lot of ballplayers to the service and offered me a job in 1918. I became a regular in their infield and was making more money than ever before. And then the International League collapsed, either on account of the war or me.

"After that I hung around waiting for my draft board to call me. Eventually they did. They ordered me to Pittston, Pa., and I was sworn into the Army that afternoon. The next day was November 11, and the war folded. I stopped three baseball leagues and a world war."

The tip-off on what kind of baseball the big leagues are prepared to serve up next season, if baseball escapes the manpower net, is illustrated by the report the other day that the Boston Red Sox had signed Al Simmons as a utility outfielder.

After the first month of the 1943 season, Simmons will be 40 years old. Last year he didn't play ball at all. The year before, he got into the line-up only as a pinch-hitter. In Toots Shor's restaurant one night last summer, Simmons admitted that he couldn't play ball anymore, and was taking a job in a Detroit bomber factory.

But the big leagues are no longer so particular about their talent. Out of necessity they're forced to compromise with quality. With the Red Sox, Simmons would be replacing either Ted Williams or Dominic DiMaggio in the outfield. Any lack of ecstasy by the Boston fans at that move will be understood. But baseball this year won't be a young man's game.

After the first impact of the "work or fight" order threatened to sweep organized baseball into the discard for the duration, a noticeable reaction has set in and a case is being built up for the game as a valuable wartime function.

"Baseball is asking no favors," said one spokesman for the game yesterday, "but we still think we will be permitted to operate next season after all of the factors are weighed. We believe that baseball, at least in the two big leagues, will be allowed to continue strictly on its merits as a morale factor.

"President Roosevelt interpreted baseball as a civilian morale essential last year, and during last season the game established itself not only as a means of relaxation and recreation for the public but also for the soldiers.

"Soldiers and sailors crowded into our parks without charge. At the Army posts and naval bases, both in this country and overseas, the U. S. O. officials reported that the big league baseball scores were a matter of tremendous interest to our men in uniform. The World Series was probably the most popular program ever short-waved to our forces overseas.

"Big league baseball as a morale factor can be preserved without any great loss of manpower. The two big leagues can operate with a total of 480 players. That means only an insignificant number in our manpower program that embraces millions. If baseball has any morale value whatsoever, then it should be worth the apportionment of 480 men to maintain it.

"I believe that this will be taken into consideration by the Manpower Commission and other authorities with jurisdiction. As I say, baseball isn't asking any favors. We feel that, with the big leagues employing only 480 men, their continued operation would be a valuable asset to our morale program."

Jeffers Asks Bay Meadows To Halt Meet

By the Associated Press

Sacramento, Calif., Feb. 4.—Rubber Director W. M. Jeffers has requested cancellation of the 50-day racing meet at Bay Meadows, in the interests of conserving rubber, Gov. Earl Warren reported today.

Bay Meadows, which is at San Mateo, 20 miles south of San Francisco, had been authorized by the State Horse Racing Board to start the meet February 20.

Warren said a letter received from Jeffers today pointed out that the people of San Francisco and of San Jose, 28 miles south, would have to use their automobiles, using up a large amount of rubber for a purpose unessential to the war effort.

"I am sure," Jeffers wrote, "you will agree with me that it is far better to have matters of this sort dealt with locally and informally than by orders from Washington."

Governor Warren said he would refer the letter to the Racing Commission with a request note and to the racing track management that they comply with Jeffers' request.

Eastern's Ineligible Player Voids Game

Roosevelt Threatened by Wilson; Eastern Favored Over Colts at Tech

One of its five straight triumphs in the public high school basketball series was wiped off the Eastern High record yesterday as a protest, involving the Tide's 34-32 margin over Tech in two overtimes last week, was upheld by Director Hardy Pearce.

Tech's protest, in brief, was that Eastern used an ineligible player in the two extra sessions necessary to decide a winner. Pearce decided the Manual Trainers' complaint was justified, offering Tech the game on forfeit.

It was refused, however. Tech authorities asked only for a replay and that only in the event it needed another victory to gain the four-team championship playoff in two weeks. Eastern already has clinched a place. Thus the bitter battle was thrown out of the standings, leaving them read;

	W	L	Pct.
Eastern	4	0	1.000
Roosevelt	4	1	.800
Tech	2	1	.667
Central	3	2	.600
Wilson	2	2	.500
Coolidge	2	2	.500
Western	0	4	.000
Anacostia	0	5	.000

The background of the protest runs like this: Eastern and Tech were tied, 28 to 28, at the end of regulation time in an afternoon clash at Roosevelt. In the first overtime, a 3-minute affair, the Tide's Tommy Wingo committed his fourth personal foul and was waved out by the scorekeeper.

Referee Tony Latona, however, ruled that a fifth foul was allowed during an overtime and Wings remained in action, finally passing to Freddy Seaton for the winning basket early in the "sudden death" second overtime.

School authorities found that no fifth foul is allowed in scholastic overtimes as in the colleges, forcing a ruling in Tech's favor.

With the standings thus juggled, the series goes into a pair of torrid doubleheaders, one tonight and another tomorrow night at Tech at 7:30.

Eastern is favored to win its fifth game again, this time with Coolidge as its opponent in tonight's opener. A second contest pits Wilson and Roosevelt, with the former trying to stave off elimination from the tourney race.

Tomorrow, Tech gets back into action, meeting a graduation-riddled Central five. Western and Anacostia, neither of which has won a game so far, close out the week's play in a game in which one or the other will finally break its string.

C. U. Mittmen To Oppose Coast Guard

Catholic University's boxers, defeated last week, 5 to 3, by Western Maryland, will make their second start Saturday night at C. U. Gym, meeting the vastly improved Coast Guard Academy mitt slingers of New London, Conn. The Coast Guardsmen, defeated, 4½ to 3½, by Maryland, came back last week to upset Army, 6 to 2, which bodes ill for Cardinal hopes.

Coach Eddie LaFond of C. U. will make at least one change in the line-up which faced the Terrors with Charley Murto fighting in place of Fred Randall, who leaves today for induction into the Army.

The Coast Guard team will rely mainly on Joe O'Hara, 120; Bill Wallace, 127, and Capt. Rufus Drury, 145, pound classes, all of whom won their fights against both Maryland and Army.

Christman Transferred To Iowa State Post

Columbia, Mo., Feb. 4 (AP).—Chief Boatswain's Mate Paul Christman, the "Pitchin' Paul" of Missouri football fame, has been ordered to report as a naval athletic instructor at Iowa State College.

Christman, who has been serving at the Diesel Training School here since last summer, will be joined at Ames by his wife and young son.

Pennsylvania Refuses Bobo Fight License

By the Associated Press

Pittsburgh, Feb. 4.—Harry Bobo, Pittsburgh Negro slugger, who holds the title of "heavyweight boxing champion for the duration" in Maryland and Ohio, failed today to get back his boxing license in Pennsylvania which was lifted in 1942 after three eye specialists stated he was blind in the right eye.

Chairman Leon Rains of the State Boxing Commission, said Eddie Kapphan, Bobo's manager, had presented a letter from a physician stating Bobo's eyesight was "near normal," with 20-20 in the left eye and 20-30 in the right one.

Rains said the commission stood ready new, as it had since the suspension, to reinstate the boxer when he had satisfied it that his right eye was in sufficiently good condition to permit him to continue fighting without risking blindness in the event of serious injury to the other eye.

Must Stand Hospital Exam

"But, we insist that Bobo undergo an examination at a hospital by an eye specialist," said Rains. "I offered to attend the examination personally, suggesting next Tuesday when I will be back in town for the fights here."

Rains' home is in Philadelphia.

Kapphan did not comment on the chairman's offer.

Bobo's suspension came during negotiations for a bout with Bob Pastor, which the promoters predicted would have attracted a gate of $75,000 or more. He was ranked near the top of the heavyweight contenders for Joe Louis' crown then, although only 19.

Recently he returned to the ring, winning bouts in Ohio and Maryland which had been billed for the "duration championship." He has had examinations at Cleveland and Columbus, where he knocked out Larry Lane in the first round and beat Buddy Walker by decision.

Armstrong Signs For Two Scraps

Los Angeles, Feb. 4 (AP).—Hammerin' Henry Armstrong, fighting along the comeback route, signed today for two 10-round bouts.

Armstrong will meet Tippy Larkin, Garfield, N. J., at San Francisco's Civic Auditorium March 10, and Jimmy Garrison at an unspecified date in Oakland, Calif.

Signing of the matches was announced by his manager, George Moore, who said the bull-shouldered little Negro is gaining strength rapidly after a tonsilectomy and will begin training in about two weeks for his scrap with Larkin.

Danny Kraus Stars As Hoyas Win, 51-35

Hassett Helps Riddle Penn State's Defense; Mahnken and Kostecka Score

By Merrell W. Whittlesey
Post Staff Writer

A magnificent ball-handling exhibition with Danny Kraus and Billy Hassett at the controls enabled Georgetown to riddle Penn State's famed sliding zone defense and beat the Nittany Lions, 51 to 35, before nearly 2500 fans last night in Tech gym.

Kraus and Hassett handled the ball in midcourt, patiently waited until they faked the Lions out of position and then shot the sphere to big Johnny Mahnken or Andy Kostecka, whose 18 and 15-point totals were tops for the night. The victory was 13 in 15 starts for the Hoyas, while the 16-point defeat was a rare one for Coach Johnny Lawther.

Kraus, who night after night looks like one of the greatest college courtmen ever to play here, personally tossed in five baskets and his whip-like passes were good for seven more, most of them to the 6-foot-8 Mahnken, who was a marvel under the basket.

Off To Encouraging Start

Penn State, whose worst previous defeat was a 9-point one at the hands of unbeaten New York U. in the Garden, was off to an encouraging start as lanky Dave Bornstein dropped three straight baskets on quick cuts under the hoop but after he dropped a foul for a 7-4 lead, Georgetown was off.

Kraus swished a field goal on the dead run, passed to Lloyd Potolicchio for another, a play State didn't even see and whammed a pass to Mahnken and Georgetown was ahead, 12-7. Two fouls made it 14 and Kraus dropped another one-hand shot and then a long one for a 16-7 lead and the closest the Lions ever drew was eight points.

The smart, deliberate Penn State club, bigger than Georgetown, seemed dazed by the sudden turn of events. The Hoyas were driving the Lions back on offense, and although it was continually behind, State could not get a free hand for a shot. Most of its baskets were follow-ups on foul shots or the result of their superior height.

The game was played in quarters, at State's request as it has games tomorrow night and Saturday afternoon. The Hoyas were ahead, 16-7 at the first quarter and in the second quarter, with an accent on ball handling, G. U. came out of the low scoring period with a 24-13 margin.

Had Little Difficulty

The Hoyas had a little difficulty working the ball in scoring position in the third period and despite Coach Elmer Ripley's pleas to "get some more points," the Hoyas were held to six and entered the fourth period leading 30-20.

State drew within eight points twice early in the fourth period until the game took a fast turn. Kostecka, with only one field goal at this point, was on hand for four timely follow-ups and when his spurt was over, Mahnken dumped four in a row as the game took rout proportions. Hassett counted on two spectacular plays to run up the points.

Frank Calder, Nat'l Hockey President, Dies

By International News Service

Montreal, Feb. 4.—Frank Calder, 65, president of the National Hockey League since 1917, died today after a short illness. Mervin (Red) Dutton, former manager of the now-defunct New York Americans, is expected to succeed him.

A native of Bristol, England, Calder was an active athlete in his youth, and was educated in English schools. In 1900, he came to Canada and opened a private school. He became a sports writer on the Montreal Witness five years after establishing the school, and quickly became a dominant figure in Canadian sports writing of that era.

For several years, Calder served as sports editor of the Montreal Herald, then in 1915 became secretary of the old Canadian Hockey Association. Two years later, he was made head of the newly organized National Hockey League.

It was under Calder's guidance that the league grew from a loosely organized outfit into an international league with several United States teams participating. Development of big league hockey as it is played today was accomplished under his stewardship.

Maryland Race Fate To Be Known Today

By the Associated Press

Baltimore, Feb. 4.—Announcing that a meeting with the Office of Defense Transportation was being arranged, Frank Small, jr., chairman of the Maryland Racing Commission, said today no statement on the 1943 racing situation in this State would be made until tomorrow.

Small's announcement came after the commission had met with the operators of the major Maryland tracks and Attorney General William C. Walsh.

The commission chairman made no statement on the question of taxation expected to arise due to the tracks' hope of having the taxes on racing derived from a cut from the mutuel "take" on betting, rather than a per diem basis.

Small presided at the meeting. Chester F. Hockley and George P. Mahoney, other commissioners, also were present.

Representing Havre de Grace were James P. Ross and Robert B. Archer; Laurel, Goss L. Stryker, Dr. D. P. MacGuire and Luke O'Brien; Bowie, Joseph Farrell, M. Hampton Magruder, Alton Jump and Richard Pending, and Pimlico, Harry Pard and Matt Daiger.

Helen Jacobs Says She's Through as Bigtime Player

By the Associated Press

Northampton, Mass., Feb. 4.—Helen Jacobs, erstwhile tennis star now training to be a WAVE, is through with the big time court game, she said today.

Asserting that writing was her profession and history her hobby, Miss Jacobs said in an interview she had not played tennis for a year and had no time for it in the Navy. She pointed out when she signed up in the Navy she was working on her second novel.

Despite the rigorous training required for tennis, Helen declared that "the Navy is the most strenuous thing I have experienced."

Hot Springs Set For 30-Day Meet

Little Rock, Ark., Feb. 4 (AP).—Barring action from the Federal Government, the 30-day horse racing meet at Hot Springs starting February 22 apparently had clear sailing today.

The Arkansas Senate, after a full-dress debate, defeated 11-19 a bill to outlaw horse and dog racing and make betting on races a felony.

Senator L. L. Mitchell, one of the sponsors of the bill, told the Senate it was the "last time" the antiracing plan would be presented to the Legislature "because the people are going to vote on it at the general election next year and settle the question."

It was the first announcement that antiracing forces planned to initiate a repeal measure in 1944.

Senator H. B. Hardy, author of the bill, based his attack on the assertion that the races would be in conflict with the war effort, and at one pointed asserted:

"They ought to have Seabiscuit and Whizzaway out plowing to grow turnip greens and cornbread."

Hawks and Rangers Tie

New York, Feb. 4 (AP).—Playing a stirring but strictly minor-league brand of hockey, the Chicago Black Hawks and New York Rangers struggled to a 1-1 tie tonight before 11,211 spectators. It was the Rangers' fourteenth consecutive National Hockey League game without a victory.

Red Wings Win

Toronto, Feb. 4 (AP).—Detroit Red Wings strengthened their hold on second place in the National Hockey League tonight by defeating the third-place Toronto Maple Leafs, 3-2, before close to 12,000 fans.

Zivic Meets Beau Jack Tonight

Fritzie Belittles Odds on Georgian; Says He'll Win

By Sid Feder
Associated Press Sports Writer

New York, Feb. 4.—The chances are no one is ever going to accuse Fritzie Zivic of being a learned student of history, but the quiet little noise from Pittsburgh is convinced he's going to give the folks a snappy history lesson tomorrow, using Beau Jack as his pertinent example.

The big wind from Smokeytown, who holds all free-style records for tossing words around, tangles with the Georgia Beau in a 10-rounder in Madison Square Garden. And in spite of the doleful mourning in his behalf, Fritz-eroo insists this is one time the old gag that "history repeats" is going to happen.

Everything adds up to exactly what occurred in his first fight with Henry Armstrong in 1940, says the last of the five flying Zivics, even to the same funeral services they were saying over him then before the fight. He all but knocked Hennery out that night, and he figures the set-up is rite for him to do the same thing this time. As a matter of fact, he's betting on it.

The most notable parallels in the two cases are: (1) That the wagering "Wise Guys" who make the prices on fights—and haven't had a winner since putting their money on death and taxes—have installed Jack a 5 to 13 choice, just as they made Armstrong 1 to 4 against Fritzie, and (2) the "experts'" opinion that Jack's rushing, crowding style is the factor that will whip Zivic, just as they predicted Armstrong's charges would do.

Fight Parallels Zivic-Armstrong Fight in 1940

Of course, a lot of punches have been pitched at Fritzie since then, and he's crowding 30 years. On the other hand Jack is just a youngster who's been skyrocketing up the trail the last few months, topping off his climb by winning the New York version of the world lightweight championship in December.

But Fritzie does a fair country job of getting out of the way of punches aimed his way, and is still one of the more dangerous guys at in-fighting, which is just what tomorrow's tussle figures to feature. What's more, since the Beau's title won't be on the line in this one, Zivic will have a weight pull of some 10 pounds—145 to 135—all of which leads this corner to ride with the underdog and pick Fritzie to pull the same kind of rabbit out of the hat as he did against Hennery back in '40.

The two thumpers will have plenty of company in the big Eighth Avenue sports soupbowl when they go to the post at 10 p. m. (E. W. T.). Continuing the trend which has made this one of the biggest boxing seasons in the Garden, Promoter Mike Jacobs is looking for a crowd of 15,000 or more.

'Sugar' Faces Jake La Motta

Detroit, Feb. 4 (AP).—Rugged Jake LaMotta of New York is one of eight opponents to have gone the distance with murderous-punching (Sugar) Robinson, and on the assumption that he can do it again, fight fans are taking the long green out of mothballs for the 10-round battle here tomorrow night.

Robinson, uncrowned king of the welterweights from Harlem, who is unbeaten in 129 amateur and pro fights, usually turns out the lights in the first round (he has ended 56 bouts that early), but rough-and-tumble LaMotta, a middleweight who holds a 13-pound weight edge, stayed 10 rounds with him last fall in New York.

Since that time LaMotta has accumulated a modest five-fight winning streak of his own, giving the contestants duplicate pro records of 40 victories.

American U. Meets Blues; G. W. Travels

George Washington will place its unbeaten record in Southern Conference competition on the line against North Carolina State College in Raleigh tonight, while in the only local game American University and Gallaudet will renew an old rivalry in the Eastern High School gym at 8:30 p. m.

G. W. will meet one of the top-flight teams in the conference in the Wolfpack quintet, winner in five of seven conference games. N. C. State smothered Clemson, 68 to 34, in its last outing. The hosts lost Bones McKinney, the colorful center from last year's club but otherwise have about the same team which lost to Duke in the conference championship finals.

George Washington will take a six-game winning streak into the family clash but if they beat the Wolfpack the Colonials will probably have their string snapped tomorrow night when they go against Norfolk Naval Training Station, possibly the best college or service team in the country. They will remain in Norfolk Sunday and make the short trip to Williamsburg Monday to meet William and Mary.

American University will be favored over the Blue tonight, principally because of its one-two scoring punch in George Zuras, who boasts a 19-point-a-game average, and Bart Fugler, who has clicked for better than 15 points a game in nine outings.

American will return home tomorrow night to entertain Randolph-Macon.

Coach Burt Shipley's University of Maryland squad will leave today for West Point where they play Army tomorrow afternoon. The Cadets have lost six straight, including games to Georgetown and George Washington.

New York Ball Clubs To Use Girl Ushers

New York, Feb. 4 (AP).—Attention has been centered on the Manpower Commission's attitude toward players, but baseball's first impact from the listing of non-essential jobs has been on ushers.

The three major league clubs in New York expect to staff Yankee Stadium, the Polo Grounds and Ebbets Field with girl ushers this season.

Pounds Says Why Not Start Eating Up the Race Tracks?

Nothing Editor Takes Easy Way Out And Goes Back to Writing Notes

Marietta Park, D. C.

Dear Boss:

"If you must write to your boss," pens a Petworth matron, "please give us some more of that three-dot material. My husband can read those short, snappy pieces and eat his breakfast at the same time. When you make the entire letter one subject, he doesn't have time to read it and takes the paper to work with him. I have to wait until he comes home and then he gives me a bum, second-hand version."

HAIGHT

Well, Boss, all I can say is that a "bum, second-hand version" of "Pieces of Haight" must be something. I never know what I'm going to write when I sit down, but this one will be some of that three-chew stuff:

Did you hear the one about the moron who received a phone call? . . . His friend asked, "If I got you out of bed I'm sorry" . . . and the moron replied, "That's O. K. I had to get up anyway . . . to answer the phone." During last week's sleet storm a man was walking one of those dogs with long hair over its eyes. The dog's face was packed with sleet. . . . One of those high-school hep cats looked at the canine and remarked, "Ain't that a shame—no windshield wipers." I wonder what the puppies would look like if one of those dogs were mated with a Mexican hairless. . . . The Flynn boys should get together and write a book called "Paving Blocks and Door Locks." . . . They tell me that if you drink four "horses necks" and then eat horse-meat steak, you will be eligible to run in the eighth race at New Orleans. . . . If people are going to eat race horses, why not eat up the race tracks, too? . . . For instance, on horse-meatless days, why not serve creamed eighth-pole with diced mutuel department and clubhouse lawn salad?

Clark Griffith goes in for colorful third baseman for the Nats . . . he has "Rhapsody in Bluege" and now he buys "Friddy Baby" . . . a friend of mine, who was "just dying to get on the radio," made the grade the other morning . . . he had a small part on the WINX traffic court program . . . cost him ten bucks . . . speaking of radio have you listened to "Breakfast At Sardardi's" and heard that guy slay the women with the simple, age-old gag of trying on their hats? . . . Capt. George Durno, pictured with President Roosevelt at Casablanca, is another of those rare "native Washingtonians" . . . he used to play a mean quarterback for our kid football team . . . when the circus used to come to town, the boys would sneak in under the canvas . . . next week the Shrine Circus comes to Uline's Arena and we'll have to see if the youngsters can sneak in under the concrete . . . when you are out of fuel oil (and we are right now) remember that your plight is nothing compared with that of an Army transport out of oil and being chased by an enemy submarine . . . the shortest baseball game on record was between the Giants and Phils in 1919 . . . despite the fact that it lasted only 51 minutes, the score was 6-1 Giants . . . something every fat man should know—hot black coffee will remove gravy stains from neckties if applied immediately . . . I'm having a bad day . . . can't think of anything nasty to say about Art (WOL) Brown.

I've been variously referred to as Pounds, Lardy, Heavy, Fats and right on down to the inevitable "Mr. Five-By-Five" . . . the other night I was trying to sing harmony with some of the boys . . . in the middle of a song, a fellow pointed at me and yelled, "Haight, you're flat." . . . I thanked him for the compliment. . . . Friend Frank Menke, who goes in for figuring such things, says the odds against getting a perfect bridge hand—13 cards of any suit—are 158 billion to 1. . . . if you had 42 hands dealt to you each day in the 365 days in a year and, if you lived to be 10 million years of age, you could expect to hold a perfect hand just before they called the undertaker . . . in poker, it is 7 to 5 that you don't get a pair of any kind on the deal . . . that's five-card poker, of course—none of that spit-in-the-ocean or low-hole card or seven-card deuces wild . . . speaking of trick poker games, Ralph Murdock has played that "wild baseball" so much that he is now known as "The Judge Landis of Southeast." As ever, POUNDS HAIGHT.

P. S. "Are you a reporter?" she asked. I nodded. She came back with, "Ah—a sort of observation balloon."

Man o' War's Trainer Hurt in Accident

Miami, Fla., Feb. 4 (AP).—Louis Feustel, widely known trainer of race horses who once handled the famous Man O' War, was in a serious condition here today as the result of being struck by an automobile.

Feustel was being treated at the Jackson Memorial Hospital, where it was reported he had a fractured vertebra. Police said the car was set in motion accidentally.

Feustel was in Miami to buy race horses.

Net Operating Income of Rails Increases 48%

By the Associated Press

The Nation's Class 1 railroads had a net operating income of $1,480,940,760 in 1942, the Interstate Commerce Commission reported yesterday, 48.3 per cent more than the 1941 figure of $998,286,708.

The 1942 figure would indicate, on the basis of calculations used in railroad circles, that the year's net earnings were around 960 million dollars, which would exceed the record set in 1929 by 63 million dollars. A month ago the Interstate Commerce Commission estimated the year's net earnings might exceed 950 million dollars but hardly would reach a billion dollars.

Net earnings are estimated by deducing from the operating income the carriers' fixed charges and adding their income from nonoperating sources, such as investments.

The railroads earned 499 million dollars in 1941.

The Interstate Commerce Commission's report on net operating income—which is figured after allowance for taxes but without deduction for fixed charges—came in the midst of its hearing to determine whether increases in rates, fares and charges authorized a year ago should be vacated as requested by the Office of Economic Stabilization and Price Administration.

December net operating income was placed at $170,850,986, compared with $79,332,410 in the same month a year ago.

Freight revenue last year amounted to $931,918,083, an increase of 36.7 per cent, while passenger revenues totaled $119,150,730, an increase of 121.2 per cent.

Magazines Reported Refusing Advertising

New York, Feb. 4 (AP).—The New York Times said today that many magazines had been forced to refuse advertising as a result of the order reducing the use of paper by 10 per cent.

Some were booked solid for advertising space through the balance of the year, the Times said. Agencies complained that they were being turned down right and left in their efforts to place business.

"The inevitable result, however, according to agency executives," the Times said, "will be a sharp rise in advertising rates and numerous cancellations from advertisers who may not be able to use the space they are contracting for now."

Private Sale Of Erie Issue Stirs Clash

By the Associated Press

New York, Feb. 4.—Another clash between leading financial interests over the question of competitive bidding for sale of new securities cropped up to day in the wake of last night's announcement that the Erie Railroad had sold an issue of $14,000,000 fifteen years 3½ per cent bonds to Morgan Stanley & Co., prominent Wall Street investment underwriting house.

The sale was subject to the approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission with whom the issue was filed today.

Indications that the Ere proposed to sell bonds by this direct negotiation method brought earlier this week a strong protest from Halsey, Stuart & Co., New York and Chicago investment underwriting firm, and Otis & Co., Cleveland financial concern.

ICC Gets Protests

In telegrams to the Interstate Commerce Commission and directors of the Erie the two firms asked that the bonds be sold by competitive bidding and said they were prepared to make firm bids for the securities.

In Cleveland last night, Carl E. Newton, newly elected president of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway, aligned himself with those favoring competitive bidding. Newton, whose road owns 43,000 shares of Erie common stock, said he would direct his legal department to protect the interests of his road to the fullest extent.

Other Flareups Recalled

The competitive bidding controversy has been marked by a number of flareups over the last few years and in more than one the Halsey Stuart-Otis group and Morgan Stanley have been on opposite sides just as in this instance.

Giving the dispute wide interest was the ruling of the Securities and Exchange Commission some time ago that new issues of public utility securities be sold by competitive bidding instead of the time-honored private placement with underwriting concerns at negotiated prices.

A. C. & F. Declares $8.29 Dividend but Withholds $1.04

New York, Feb. 4 (AP).—Directors of American Car & Foundry Co. today declared a dividend of $8.29 a share on the preferred stock, $1.04 of which will be withheld pending completion of present litigation involved in the payment. The dividend is payable February 28 to stock of record February 15.

Last week a New Jersey court decided payment of $7.25 a share on the preferred could be paid immediately, reserving decision on an application for counsel for a preferred stockholder for compensation of $1.04 a share. An action was brought against the company last summer by the stockholder seeking to restrain it from paying a dividend of $1 a share on the common stock until earned profits allegedly accruing to the preferred in 1936 and 1938 had been paid. The company contended it operated at a loss in 1936 and at a reduced profit in 1938.

In 1941 a total of $9.04 a share was declared on the preferred, partly out of 1942 fiscal year earnings and partly out of 1941 profits, plus 29 cents carried over from earnings in 1937 and 1938. Under the company's charter the preferred is entitled, out of all surplus profits, whenever declared by the directors, to noncumulative dividends not exceeding 7 per cent annually.

Senate Investigation Shows Steel Shortage Looms in 1943

In a report critical of the armed services, the "Big Steel" companies and the War Production Board, the Senate War Investigating Committee said yesterday it appeared doubtful that essential civilian needs for steel could be met this year.

"There is every reason to believe that there will be sufficient amounts of steel for military purposes," the committee headed by Senator Truman (Democrat), Missouri, reported. "But there is no assurance that we will be able to fill all the needs of essential civilian industries which will have a two-year backlog of needed repairs, replacements and additions."

The committee said this prospect arose from three factors: an underestimate by the armed forces of their steel needs, the "desire of the 'Big Steel' companies to prevent any expansion that might reset unfavorably against their control of the steel industry after the war," and delay of WPB's part in converting industry to a war basis.

Looking beyond this year, the committee said that "we may well experience another shortage if the war so continues and its scope so expands as to require us to increase or replace plant facilities. The present prospects for over-all ingot tonnage may therefore be viewed without undue alarm, although not with complacency."

It recommended that "the entire steel scrap collection program should be revamped" and accused the big companies of reluctance "to adopt new melting practices or to adapt themselves to varying conditions of scrap and ore supply."

"The last start (in expanding production) and the insistence on conventional methods," the report declared, "have limited us mainly to conservative increases primarily raising the capacities of the larger companies.

"There is ample evidence that the West Coast and the South could provide the raw materials for considerable expansion to supply demands in those areas. Some expansion there has been authorized. Considerably more could have been permitted had the program started early enough when the steel necessary for construction was available."

Murphy Store Wins Treasury Minute Man Flag

The G. C. Murphy store at 1214 G Street received a Treasury Minute Man Flag Wednesday morning, signifying that the employes are participating better than 90 per cent in regular war bond purchases through the payroll war savings plan. This is one of the first retail stores in Washington employing more than 500 people to achieve this goal.

The blue and white Minute Man Flag was presented to store Manager C. P. Kerley and V. C. McKee, sales promotion manager, by D. G. Guynn of the Treasury Speakers Bureau of the District of Columbia War Savings Committee.

The personnel of the store, which had assembled for the presentation, was lauded by Guynn for their splendid participation. It was reported that more than 94 per cent have pledged a portion of their weekly salaries for the purchase of War Savings Bonds.

Miss C. Anderson, personnel director of the store, was praised by Kerley for her assistance in securing the employes' pledges.

Chinese Keep New Year Today

Today is the Chinese New Year. It is the Year of the Ox. It is the year 2493, dating from the birth of Confucius, or the year 4894, dating from something else—the experts aren't quite sure—or, if you're employed at the Chinese Embassy, it is the thirty-second year of the Chinese Republic.

Definitely known is that last night's new moon was the first after the sun had entered Aquarius, an event which doesn't occur at the same time every year. As a matter of fact, it can fall on any day between January 20 and February 19. So, by the reckoning of the lunar calendar, the job of determining just when the Chinese New Year takes place isn't for any man. It is for those who know about such things, and we have their word that today is the day.

But gone from Washington's Chinatown will be the traditional gaiety and celebrations of former years. These are war years, and many of Chinatown's sons are at war, wearing the khaki and blue and olive drab of Uncle Sam and, in some instances, the uniforms of Chiang Kai-shek.

Exact figures were not available last night, but the local Chinese population is believed to total about 1000 persons.

Only at 1218 Connecticut Avenue Northwest, the headquarters of United China Relief, will the day be formally observed. There between 5 and 7 p. m. a tea has been planned at which Chinese Ambassador and Mme. Mei Taoming will receive. Many notables, including Admiral Ten Fu Liu and Maj. Gen. and Mrs. Chu Shih-ming of the Chinese Embassy, Mrs. J. Borden Harriman, Mrs. Eugene Meyer, Justice and Mrs. Stanley Reed, War Manpower Commissioner and Mrs. Paul McNutt, Mme. T. V. Soong, wife of China's Foreign Minister, and many others will attend.

Arlington To Get 1420 Dwelling Units

In Arlington County, 1420 temporary family dwelling units will be completed within the next five months, Oliver C. Winston, director of Region III, Federal Public Housing, announced yesterday.

Within the same time 680 dormitory units for couples will be completed, and 200 more family dwelling units will be erected within a slightly longer time.

All are being built on leased land so that the temporary structures can be removed at the end of the war.

The Glebe Road project on the old Sickles property between Glebe Road, South Lang Street and New Shirley Drive, will have 820 family dwelling units. Of these, 408 will have two bedrooms, 204 three bedrooms, and 208 one bedroom. A school and community center will be built on the property. Contractor is Fred J. Brotherton, Inc.

The Columbia Pike project near the Army and Navy Country Club will have 500 units.

Eugene Simpson is contractor for 100 units for colored families which is underway in Arlington County to serve Pentagon, Navy Annex and other war workers.

Ground has been broken by Caulway, Inc., contractors for the Jefferson Davis, 680-unit dormitory building.

Bids will be advertised February 20 for 200 more units in Arlington on the southeast side of the West Bros. Brick Yard. These will be for white war workers, Joseph C. Gray, area representative for Region III, said.

Brake Taken Off U. S. Promotions

That "brake" on promotions has been released already by the Civil Service Commission. Promotions are wide-open again, at least for the moment. The commission will advise agencies today that it has postponed its "control" over promotions for 30 days but there's a general feeling among the agencies that the proposed restrictions will never go into effect. Too much red tape and too many complications. Meantime, the commission must find a way to expedite its control scheme or drop it altogether. The plan went into effect last week. It is being put back on the shelf for further study this week.

It provided that no employe could be given a raise of more than $300 unless he had served in his present job for at least six months. To be eligible for a raise of $600 or more the employe must have served in his present job for at least a year. Exceptions could be made if they were approved by the commission. Once in operation the commission discovered that Uncle Sam would be breaking his word with thousands of employes if the promotion "brake" was strictly enforced. These people are brought in at small salaries and trained for specific jobs. The Government guarantees them big promotions when training is successfully completed and when they are assigned to jobs. The variance of salaries between departments and agencies was another complication.

Nevertheless, congressional sentiment will come close to forcing some sort of promotion control. The House Appropriations Committee is interested in the pirating of employes by one Federal agency from another. And the committee has been getting plenty of evidence from the old-line agencies. For example, J. B. McNamara, Internal Revenue Bureau executive assistant, told the committee that war agencies were hiring their employes at higher salaries. "It is natural for them (the war agencies) to look to old established Government agencies for help," he commented, "and it would be all right if they were satisfied with a nucleus of experienced employes, but they want them for the whole job and we have no protection against it."

Byron Mitchell, who left his Budget Bureau position to help Paul McNutt get his War Manpower Commission organized, is now back with Budget. He has been succeeded at Manpower by James Bond who was with Manpower in Texas. Bond will have charge of the U. S. Employment Service which will be expanded enormously in both authority and personnel if present plans are worked out. Incidentally, you can discount by about 100 per cent the story that McNutt will ask Congress for a labor draft law. That controversial proposal is fast gathering dust in a pigeon hole . . . The Byrd Committee is dissatisfied with Civil Service's statistics on Federal employes. It will now gather them itself. The agencies must report them by the sixth of each month on the number of employes, salaries paid, and work performed.

Navy's Allotment Division is moving to Cleveland today in a nine-car special train. Four hundred and fifty employes and their families will be leaving Washington. Navy also has moved two other offices to the Ohio city—Customs Bureau is in the censoring business, too. It has 1900 employes at the ports of entry who censor everything except communications among other things . . . Office of Price Administration is ready to concentrate on an employe suggestion program. A full-time man has been assigned to run the campaign. The best suggestion each month will be selected and entered in The Post's Better Government Contest. The January contest closes on Monday. Agencies must make their nominations to this column by that time. The Post will awrrd a $100 war bond to the employe whose suggestion will most improve the Federal service.

Senator Mead, who steered the "stop-gap" pay raise legislation through Congress in December, yesterday introduced a bill that would become effective on May 1 for the duration of the war. The bill would give employes now paid overtime an 8 per cent raise. Employes would be paid true overtime, overtime on 260 annual working days. Overtime is now computed on 360 days. Eight hours of overtime under the new Mead bill would amount to a 30 per cent increase. Employes who now get a flat 10 per cent increase would get 15 per cent under the bill.

The bill would wipe out the $500 ceiling but overtime would be paid on the first $2900 for employes whose base pay is over that figure. An employe now paid $2900 gets $625 in overtime if he works a 48-hour week for a year. Under the new Mead bill he'd get $870. So would all other employes paid above $2900 except Cabinet officers and the like. Postal employes are excluded from the bill. They insist on a flat $300 bonus, plus overtime.

A Little Knowledge . . .

Dallas, (AP).—The plaintiff seeking a divorce in District Court told the judge:

"I sent my wife and her mother to the defense school and the minute they got their riveters' diplomas they tore out for California to take jobs in a plane plant and I haven't seen them since."

He got the divorce.

Reunion

Springfield, Ill. (A.P.).—James Armstrong of the U. S. Navy was undergoing treatment at an overseas base and wrote home for information concerning the whereabouts of his brother, Claude. Claude, also in the Navy and also laid up, did likewise. The folks, in reply, acquainted them with the fact that they were in the same naval hospital and suggested a reunion.

Bill to Ask D. C. Delegate In Congress

Election of a delegate to the House of Representatives is the most hopeful step that the District can take at this time, said Sefton Darr in addressing the Connecticut Avenue Citizens Association last night in the Parish Hall of the All Souls Memorial Episcopal Church. Darr made it clear that he favors more complete representation for the District in Congress than a voteless delegate would give. But if Congress grants us a spokesman in the House, he said, we shall be able to make much more rapid progress toward meeting the Capital's wartime problems and toward integrating Washington's 900,000 residents with the democratic system prevaling in the rest of the country.

A delegate bill representing the collective viewpoint of a citizens' committee will soon be introduced in both the House and Senate, Darr said. That bill will differ in various particulars, he said, from the Paddock bill which died with the Seventy-seventh Congress. Among the new features that are under consideration, he said, are a run-off election to make sure that the winning candidate has a majority of all the votes cast; a literary test; provision for a special election soon after the bill is adopted, and an exemption from the Hatch act permitting Government employes to take an active part in electing the proposed delegate if they so desire.

Darr called upon citizens of the community to unite behind the bill as their major civic interest in 1943. If the people of the District make a united request for a spokesman in the overworked House, he said, there is good reason to believe that Congress will grant that request.

Washington Highlands

A resolution to establish additional bus stops in Southeast Washington was adopted last night by the Washington Highlands Citizens Association.

The unit asked that a stop be made in the 3900 block of Nichols Avenue Southeast and another in the vicinity of Atlantic and South Capitol Streets. The members also urged that some action be taken to establish a playground for Walter B. Patterson School.

Fort Davis Citizens

The Capital Transit Co. was commended last night in a resolution adopted by the Fort Davis Citizens Association for the efficient manner in which it operated during the recent snow storm.

The association also approved the action of the American Automobile Association in condemning District officials for the delay in removing snow from the streets.

It was recommended that ration boards remain open at night for the convenience of persons unable to leave work during the day and that the war housing center be continued. The unit stressed the desirability of the center to list houses in outlying sections in an effort to curb any possible epidemic in the city.

Victory Sidelights

D.C. Assured Of Adequate Power

With the installation of a new 50,000 kilowatt generator at Buzzards Point nearing completion, the adequacy of Washington's power system seems assured for the duration, PEPCO officials said last night, after the North American Co. had included Washington in its list of war centers that had had to sacrifice new generators to other localities.

It was planned before the war to double the District's power supply with the addition of four new 50,000 kilowatt generators, but after the third generator was in process of installation, the company was informed that priorities on the last one had been cancelled.

Grigg to Speak At Donor Luncheon

Joseph W. Griggs, jr., war correspondent who was among the first group of Americans exchanged for German nationals after the outbreak of the war, will speak at a victory donor luncheon sponsored by the Washington chapter of Women's ORT Tuesday at 12:30 p. m. at Hotel Statler.

Also addressing the group will be Mrs. Edward B. Gresser, national president of the organization, which is devoted to training war refugees to become skilled workers, with schools in England, Canada, China, Switzerland, ten South American countries, as well as the United States.

Nash, Davidson To Aid Roll Call

New vice chairmen of public relations for the Red Cross War Fund drive are Earl Nash, executive officer of the Bureau of Motion Pictures, OWI, and Robert H. Davidson, commercial supervisor in charge of press relations, Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co., it was announced yesterday by Campaign Chairman A. G. Neal.

Nash's wide experience in Red Cross publicity work includes vice chairmanship of the war fund committee last year and charge of the 1938 roll call publicity. He has been publicity head for the District Chapter for the last six years. Davidson has done public relations work for the Community Chest, the Community War Fund Campaign and the National Symphony drive.

Apartment Taken as G. W. U. Dormitory

The Madiera Apartment Building at 707 Twenty-second Street Northwest, is being converted into a dormitory for approximately 120 women warworkers who have enrolled in one or more courses at George Washington University, it was announced yesterday. The building, to be renamed Staughton Hall for William Staughton, first president of the university, will be opened about March 1.

Employment Office Business Doubled by New Draft Order

The number of telephone calls and personal applications at the offices of the District Employment Service has doubled since the War Manpower Commission's order Tuesday that all men not employed in war industries by April 1 will be inducted into the armed services, John F. Foy, head employment specialist of the District USES, said yesterday.

Sweethearts, wives, sisters and friends called to ask countless repetitious questions as to whom the regulations would affect. Many of the calls were made by several persons all interested in the same man. As a result, Foy said, the present facilities of the office are overburdened.

R. B. Deschner, acting WMC director, said more than 600 had applied for jobs and about 2000 had phoned.

Foy asked that persons affected by the order be reminded that while the service of the USES is at their disposal, the procedure for "finding out what to do" is to visit the office at 501 K Street Northwest personally and register for employment in a vital war industry.

Meanwhile, New York City reported a rush of 10,760 men to Government employment offices seeking war jobs and the Baltimore branches experienced a 25 per cent increase in applications.

Officials Try To Improve Day Schools

Social Workers Striving to Raise Nursery Standards Through Education

By Margaret A. Lang
Post Staff Writer

Through guidance and education, District Social Workers are attempting to bring all local day nursery schools up to the standards set by the Department of Health and child care agencies.

The majority of the District's 32 licensed private agencies meet the recognized standards with both staff and equipment, a Post study shows.

But in contrast to these, The Post stumbled across one that seemed undesirable and was later termed "substandard" by Child Care officials.

This school typified many evils rising from the present regulations relating to the issuance of licenses by the Commissioners. As a new school it probably would have been refused a license after inspection by the Department of Health, but this school obtained its license many years ago.

Inadequate Equipment

The premises were dark. Play space was limited and inadequate equipment for rest periods and play was available. Department of Health officials, however, hesitate to close such a school, though it falls well below established practices, for the war time demands for day nurseries in Washington are many times greater than the available supply.

An advisory committee is now working on plans for 10 Federally sponsored day nurseries and 10 before and after school services. But this program is still in the paper work stage. Between now and the day actual operation will commence, funds must be obtained and staff assembled and estimates are that these schools will be ready within six weeks at best.

Existing schools are run in seven Settlement Houses, several churches, apartment houses and private homes. All have waiting lists longer than the numbers of children already enrolled and most charge about $30 a week, although some have sliding scales.

Several District schools show ideal conditions, with one trained teacher to every 10 children, 35 square feet of play space per child indoors, from 60 to 100 square feet of play space outdoors, and a plant and equipment that are both safe and suitable for the carrying out of an adequate program of activities.

National Research School

The National Child Research Center nursery school goes even further than the establishment standards, with eight teachers for about 50 children, several specialists and either a nurse or pediatrician to examine the children daily. A music teacher and a psychologist are doing part time work and daily records are kept for each child. All the teachers employed have completed four years of college and majored in child development. Tuition if paid on a full term basis amounts to about $33 a month and if paid by the month is $40. This Center is a non-profit institution and in addition to the tuition fees other funds are available.

"We can't make ends meet on the tuition alone," Miss Doris Erwin, acting director said.

A good day nursery has furnishings and equipment suitable to the age of the children cared for and there are an adequate number of tables and chairs for each child; toys and play apparatus are safe and kept in good condition; outdoor play equipment is suitable, Department of Health requirements state.

Teachers Important

Of prime importance, all the agencies state, are the teachers, who should be wholesome, healthy people who enjoy children addition to being trained in this field if possible.

With one social worker the Bureau of Maternal and Child Welfare of the Department of Health has attempted to bring substandard nurseries up to the forescribed standards.

"We work with the existing nursery owners and try to see that they institute the needed changes," Dr. Ella Oppenheimer, director of Child Welfare, said. "We don't like to close a day nursery except in cases of flagrant violations because of the tremendous shortage."

Failure to meet the standards, she said, was due in most cases to ignorance rather than evil intent and even when unlicensed nurseries have been found operating in violation of the law, no case of exploitation has been found.

Since November the Child Welfare division of the Department of Health has had no social worker and, although indications are that they will soon replace their worker who resigned, Child Care specialists suggested that proposed legislation relating to day care for children and child care centers outlined by the Council of State Governments, Chicago, Ill., might well be followed.

Four Hurt In Street Accidents

Traffic Mishaps In Washington During January At Low Record

D. C. traffic deaths this year . 8
D. C. deaths this date last year 15
D. C. deaths last year 108

Four persons were in serious condition at hospitals last night from traffic accidents, as records revealed January set an all-time low record for auto mishaps in Washington.

Mrs. Sarah Oden, 74, of 806 F Street Southwest, was critically hurt when struck by a streetcar yesterday afternoon at Seventh and G Streets Southwest. She suffered a fractured skull and was reported at aCsualty Hospital as dangerously injured.

In critical condition was Private Harold B. Cannon, 25, of Bolling Field. He also was hit by a streetcar, at Fourteenth and F Streets Northwest. He was taken to Walter eed Hospital with a fractured skull.

Mrs. Allie G. Robinson, 40, wife of Commander J. M. Robinson, of Alexandria, Va., received a broken right ankle and a possible fractured skull at Twelfth and D Streets Northwest, yesterday when struck by a truck. She was admitted to Emergency Hospital.

James Brosnan of Capitol Heights, Md., an inspector for the Capital Transit Co., was knocked down by a taxicab at Fourteenth Street and New York Avenue Northwest. His injuries were diagnosed at Emergency Hospital as concussion and possibly a skull fracture.

Statistics released by William A. Van Duzer, director of traffic, showed yesterday that traffic accidents last month decreased more than 50 per cent over the total for January, 1942. Deaths and personal injuries also dropped off, it was said.

A total of 527 accidents was reported last month, while January, 1942, totaled 1218. Eight persons were killed during the month this year and 183 were hurt, as compared with 12 fatalities and 375 injuries in January last year.

The low casualty record was attributed by Van Duzer to drastic curtailments in travel due to wartime restrictions. He also stated it was evident that pedestrians are paying more attention to their own safety on the streets.

Navy Seeks Reclassified Businessmen

The Navy Department announced yesterday that hundreds of businessmen about to be reclassified from 3-A to 1-A can become officers in the Naval Reserve instead of buck privates in the Army.

"Many men are unaware of the fact that they can qualify for commissions in the naval service," said Lieut. William F. Doscher of the Office of Naval Officer Procurement, 1320 G Street Northwest, where applicants are directed to apply between 8:30 a. m. and 5 p. m. daily. "The Navy needs literally thousands of men, between 19 and 50, either schooled or experienced in business administration.

"The small businessman," he continued, "whose work is not regarded as essential, and who is facing military induction, is just the man we want. The same thing, of course, applies to men in 3-A, but most of them appear to know that they are eligible for commissions."

Later, WMC officials said that while any "uncontrolled recruitment" would not be in line with WMC plans, effective controls are provided in the requirement that all applications must be cleared through the applicant's local Selective Service board. Men holding jobs designated as essential must present releases from their employers — including Government agencies—before their applications can be considered.

Eight-one enlisted WAVES fresh from the Naval Radio Operators School at Madison, Wis., yesterday dropped anchor in their new barracks at 1809 G Street Northwest, an apartment house stripped of civilian nonessentials to be converted into shipshape lodgings.

Ultimately to house 800 enlisted women, the eight-story building now is in the last stages of construction but is sufficiently finished to house the first arrivals.

Even as their sailor brethren, the WAVES will sleep in double-decker bunks (wooden, strictly nonpriority) on the basis of six girls to some rooms, eight to other slightly larger. Originally designed as civilian "economy apartments," the quarters provide their new occupants with no space to spare, but are ample enough for the requirements of their small, 100 per cent Government issue wardrobes.

An incongruous note, what with those utilitarian bunks, is struck by the remainder of the furniture, salvaged from the liners Normandie, America and Manhattan. Such luxury craft, it seems, ran to the ornate rather than the practical; hence the WAVES will be lounging in gaily upholstered chairs and davenports of undetermined periods and high colors.

The barracks, first large quarters provided for WAVES on active duty, will be run much on the order of a girls' school dormitory. Enlisted personnel will have a muster each day and may stay out until midnight with no questions asked. To stay out later than that, the "ripples" (Navy-ese for enlisted girls) must tell the commanding officer their destinations.

Rooms lack rugs, but do provide roomy closets, bath, chairs and bureaus (vintage of the Normandie, third class passage). The kitchens designed for civilian needs have been done over to serve as laundries; small kitchens are available on each floor—er, pardon, deck—for making coffee, tea or small snacks. Currently no dining facilities are available; WAVES are "eating out."

Plans call for a recreation room, library and lounge on the ground floor but so far only the lobby and the officers' rooms are completed.

William E. Leahy Receives 'Citizen of Washington Medal'

Dr. J. Rozier Biggs, chairman of the Cosmopolitan Club's Distinguished Service Committee, presents medal to William E. Leahy, as John Reilly, club president, looks on.

William E. Leahy received the Cosmopolitan Club's "Citizen of Washington Medal" yesterday at a luncheon in the Mayflower Hotel for "the most outstanding and unselfish service to his community" as the director of Selective Service.

Leahy paid tribute to the members of the local Selective Service boards and appeal boards, to the mothers whose sons are in service and to the boys themselves who "are off to do the grandest job that history will ever record."

Dr. J. Rozier Biggs, chairman of the club's distinguished service committee which selects the recipients of the annual award, made the formal presentation to Leahy, whom he characterized as a "selfless soldier on the necessary home front."

"Mr. Leahy," he said, "has practically abandoned his large and lucrative law practice and has served his country day and night as District Selective Service director—and he is serving without pay or financial compensation.

"Not only has he served, but he has injected his personality into the work by taking an interest in each selectee that comes before him; by talking like a father to every group leaving for camp, and by investigating personally claims for exemption." Dr. Biggs added that "Mr. Leahy—educator, humanitarian and lawyer—has cast aside all thought of personal gain until the Axis is nonexistent."

Among the former winners of the award present were Robert V. Fleming, president of the Riggs National Bank; former police chief Maj. Ernest W. Brown and James E. Colliflower, president of the Board of Trade. Among guests present were Maj. Gen. Lewis B. Hershey, national director of Selective Service, and the District Commissioners, John Russell Young, Guy Mason and Brig. Gen. Charles W. Kutz.

Welfare Heads Face 4 Vital Jobs

Preparing Youth To Bear War Crisis, Place After War Major Problems

Preparation of young people to bear the brunt of the war crisis, helping youth to maintain emotional stability in wartime and preparing it for major tasks ahead were described yesterday as the three major jobs of child welfare leaders.

The "jobs" were listed by Leonard W. Mayo, who presided over a meeting at the White House of the Children's Bureau Commission on Children in Wartime, of which he is chairman.

While a majority of those attending stressed the need for greater cooperation between Federal, State and community child welfare organizations, Mark A. McClosky, recreation section director for the Office of Defense Health and Welfare Services, added a bright if somewhat discordant touch in urging the promotion of "good, clean, high class beer halls."

Mrs. Franklin Roosevelt stressed the need for quick recognition of the needs of wartime recreation for children, using England's experience as an example stating that the British admit today that they did not recognize soon enough the value of recreation.

Attempts are being made, she said, to attract to the schools in England even the youngsters past school age and this is being done to a great extent by dancing programs. In this country Mrs. Roosevelt said she has found that ignorance more than any other factor has kept people from helping and has prevented them from getting things done.

"We talk to each other," she said, "but we never get the information to the right people."

She said that labor and other organized groups should be reached, groups with the power to get things done.

"But they don't know the facts first of all and they don't know how to start a step by step campaign."

"This leads you into politics but it doesn't have to be partisan politics," she said.

Mrs. Roosevelt said that the people who knew the needs should learn how to reach the great groups of organized people.

In England she said, workers women and children had to go into other peoples' homes as a result of the blitz.

"Hitler did it to impede production but he did something that improved the social conscience of a nation," she said.

Stress was placed by other members of the commission on the great need to encourage the cooperation of all groups, labor and parents as well to be informed so that they know how to fully utilize all available resources.

Stefan Urges Army Drill In High Schools

An intensified program of compulsory military training for all District high school students was urged yesterday by Representative Stefan of Nebraska, ranking Republican member of the House Appropriations Subcommitte for the District.

He suggested daily training periods, supplemented by rigorous summer camp courses under actual Army disciplinary conditions. Such a program, he declared, would be "a short cut" for the Army in preparing teen-age boys to take their places in the service.

Stefan said that he was prepared to make a fight for establishment of such a program and for the necessary funds to carry it on. The money, he added, might well come from Traffic Department appropriations, which could be cut because of the curtailed driving.

Members of the American Legion and Veterans of Foreign Wars, plus a few drill sergeants assigned from the Army, might be used to do the training, he suggested, and service camps vacated by troops being shipped abroad could be used for the summer courses.

"High school boys are now being absorbed into the Army upon graduation," he explained. "They ought to be toughened up and given training that will prepare them for the rigors of warfare.

"The present physical training program is excellent, but it ought to be enlarged to include every boy and to make the courses intensive enough so that an Army sergeant's eyes will light up when he gets an 18-year-old who has already been through the preliminary drill and hardening routine."

Correction

It was reported in yesterday's Post that separation from her husband was blamed for the suicide Wednesday of Mrs. Billie K. Wade, 40, of 228 Tenth Street Northeast. The husband, Paul B. Wade, explained to the Post yesterday that he and his wife were not separated although he was not home at the time of her death. She had been in ill health for 15 years, he said.

News in Brief of the Wartime Capital

Unable to move from his bed because of illness, Albert Gassoway, Negro, 77, of 14 E Street Southwest, was asphyxiated yesterday by smoke when fire broke out in his home.

Firemen reported the blaze originated when an oil stove became overheated in a basement apartment. The two-story structure rapidly filled with smoke, it was said, though flames were confined to the basement.

That Wild Arnold Girl

By Irene Ernhart

The story thus far: Jenny Arnold's life at home becomes thoroughly confused and almost unbearable when, all at the same time, her frivolous and indiscreet mother becomes romantically involved with a young dancing teacher; Jenny herself falls in love with her sister Madeline's fiance, Bill Winslow; and Perry Padwell, whose elopement marriage to Madeline a couple of years before was annulled by Mr. Arnold, returns to resume his courtship. Jenny's earnest but fumbling attempt to help her mother get back certain letters she wrote to the dancing teacher result finally in Mr. Arnold learning of the affair, but Jenny manages to patch the matter up. Madeline, fearful of losing Bill if he learns of her abortive marriage to Perry, leads him to believe that Jenny was the bride in the case. Bill himself has an explanation to make to Madeline regarding his identity, which she has misunderstood.

CHAPTER XXII

Jenny choked with sobs after they had gone. She leaned against the mantel and cried as she had not done since she was a child.

Presently Crick came in, closing the door behind her. "Oh, Jenny," she said, "that's no way to take on. A big girl like you."

"Oh, go away and let me alone!" Jenny said, muffled.

"Are you going to quit that bawling like a big overgrown baby, or do I have to turn you across my knee like I used to when you were little and you had a tantrum?"

"I wish I were dead!" Jenny said. "I make a mess of everything I——"

"Everything you meddle in," Crick finished grimly. "Seems to me you'd learn some time that it don't pay." She pursed her lips. "If you aren't a pretty lookin' sight!"

Jenny's face was swollen and red from weeping. She blew her nose and subdued her sobs to little hiccupy sounds. "You try to do something and nobody—nobody cares."

"They do too care," Crick said. "You're all right, Jenny. You don't fool me none by your high-horsey ways. You're soft as putty inside. And softies always get knocked around. But in the end it all comes back to 'em. Any good you ever do comes back to you some time or other—just like the wickedness kicks back on them that do it!"

Crick, in spite of her habitual air of crabbiness, could be comforting when she chose. She went upstairs with Jenny, helped her undress, fixed a sudsy bath, and after Jenny was tucked in bed she appeared with a tray of hot tea and crisp cinnamon toast.

People had come in for bridge with father and mother. Jenny heard them finally saying good-night. And Celia when she came upstairs came straight to Jenny's room.

"Oh—you're awake, Jenny," she said. "Did you—what about the letters?"

Only then did she remember the letters lying on the table in father's library! Jenny sprang out of bed reaching for her robe. To her mother's questioning look she whispered, "I left them—there."

She crept down the stairs. "Oh, God, please let him not have discovered them!" she prayed.

The lamp in the library was lit and her father was sitting in his armchair by the table. He held the packet of letters in his hands. He sat very still, staring at nothing in particular. His face was drawn and tired, and when Jenny came into the room he seemed to lift his eyes to meet hers with effort.

"I—came for my letters," Jenny said.

James Arnold cleared his throat. His face was so white that Jenny was frightened.

"Your letters, Jenny?" he said with the emphasis on the "your."

"Of—of course."

He stared at her for a long time, as if she were some one he'd never seen before.

"Why did you pretend they were yours, Jenny?"

"Oh father——"

"I haven't read them," he said gently. "But I'd know that handwriting anywhere, my dear, and I'd know yours, too."

"Oh, Daddy," Jenny cried miserably. She flung herself to her knees and put her arms about his waist and hid her face against him. "You must try to understand how it was. You mustn't be hurt."

James Arnold began to stroke her hair. The touch of his hands was strangely comforting to Jenny. She had a feeling that she was a little girl again, that she and her father had somehow gone back to that old comradeship they had shared once and then lost somewhere in the shuffle of her growing up.

After a while he lifted her chin with one hand and looked into her face. "How blind I've been, Jenny," he said simply. "How stupid."

"She really didn't care about him, father. I'm sure of it," Jenny whispered. Her mouth trembled. "And it's—it's all finished now."

"I've neglected your mother, too, I'm afraid. I've been sitting here these few minutes trying to think things out, trying not to let jealousy and anger blur my reasoning."

It's hard to do that, isn't it?"

His smile twisted. "But you don't need to worry any more about Torrento, Jenny. I'll settle everything with him tomorrow." He arose heavily.

"Where are you going?"

"I don't know. For a walk, I think. But don't worry. I have a lot of thinking to do and that's a good way to get it done."

"Let me go with you."

"No—I'd rather be alone, Jenny."

Celia was waiting at the top of the stairs for Jenny when she came up.

"Where's your father going at this time of night?" she whispered as she reached for the letters. She had seen him get his hat and go out the front door.

"He knows the letters were yours," Jenny said. "And I don't know where he's going."

Celia Arnold ran down the stairs. Jenny standing there heard her calling outside in the darkness as she ran down the drive.

"Jim, Jim, wait for me. Please wait for me!"

When Celia didn't return Jenny knew that her father had waited.

Jenny hadn't noticed Bill go into Mr. Ames' office. She only saw him when he came out, and he saw her then too for the first time. He hadn't known she was working there.

FILE FINESSE

By Jeanne Contini

Here is our nomination for prize candidate in office . . . any office. The perfect adjunct for Womanpower in business, it strikes exactly the correct balance between efficiency and charm. It is unaggressively well-groomed and tailored, at the same time, no one can deny it's attractive.

The fabric is cut out for the job, being a fine rayon gabardine which looks like military twill . . . is just as crisp, and will keep its shape. The skirt sits well; it is pleated in front and gored in back. The jacket has horizontal seaming to add width to the shoulders, taper the waist and hips. The buttons are of gold plastic, and seem more precious than they are. In other words, from a practical point of view, it hits on all cylinders.

Did you notice that the neckline will take gilets? That means that you can put on a ruffled jabot, and a tricorn, and you're ready for anything from dinner a deux to a concert at Constitution Hall. On the other hand, you could vary the formula with a soft bow and a beret, or pleated white pique and a sailor, etc.

It's the kind of dress that wins the wholehearted approval of the personnel. Here's to a raise . . .

Beige, gray, blue or green are the colors. Size 12 to 18 . . . and a gem at about $15.

Mary Haworth's Mail

Woman With Doctor's Degree, Professor's Wife, Has Become Lazy Slattern Since Marriage; Her House Resembles Pig Pen; What's the Reason?

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I don't know whether I'll finish and mail this letter or not; but at least I've started. The trouble is, I can't seem to think—really think—about anything. My mind just wanders around and worries about things. I can't seem to concentrate long enough to make up my mind just what is the matter with me. I have a doctor's degree in history and until I married, six years ago, I was an instructor in a big university, so I am not really stupid. I fell in love with another instructor and we were married. He was called to Washington a year later, when our first child was one month old. Two years later, twin sons were born to us.

I love children and I think ours are really something special; but I have grown progressively lazier and lazier. I never have been a good housekeeper, but when I had some help I managed fairly well. However, for some time now we have had no help at all and I don't know whether unconsciously I resent this or not. Consciously, I feel that I ought to be able to run a house, keep our three children well, clean and happy, and keep cheerful myself. But I am doing none of these things. Our house looks like a pig pen. My husband tries to help some, but neither of us is neat by nature and he works hard at his Government job. Our little girl, aged 5, helps some with the dishes, etc., and in watching her brothers; and I do whatever else gets done.

Right now, it's 11 o'clock in the morning, I am still in my gown and bathrobe, the breakfast dishes are undone and the beds are unmade. I am "going on" about the housework, but the problem really is: Why am I so lazy? All I want to do is listen to the radio or read and eat. I have gained 40 pounds in the last two years. I try to diet but seem to lack all self control. Don't I have any character left at all?

A. M.

DEAR A. M.: The nightmare sluggishness that is gradually overwhelming you does not stem from a breakdown in character, as you seem to think. As a matter of fact, your recital of symptoms gives a classic picture of a person suffering from subnormal functioning of the thyroid gland. On the basis of past discussion of this type of complaint, such was my inference on first reading your letter. But to make doubly sure, I referred your story to two first-rank analysts in the field of healing,—one a psychiatrist and the other a diagnostician of physical ailments. Each man in turn, speaking without knowledge of his confrere's view, said, in effect, "Judging from the information you have, this is a case of hypo-thyroidism; which is to say, a let-down in the functioning of the thyroid gland. H-y-p-o, you understand, not h-y-p-e-r;—since 'hyper-thyroidism' is the term applied to excessive acceleration of thyroid functioning, which results in high-tension nervousness, loss of weight, etc. Hypo-thyroidism, or subnormal functioning of the thyroid gland, produces a condition of chronic fatigue, mental lassitude and pronounced tendency to over-weight."

Classic Symptoms Of Thyroid Debility

The medical man went on to explain, "The thyroid is the oxidizing or energy-producing gland of the body. When it is functioning properly, body fuel (or nourishment) is systematically utilized, in the sense of being translated into mental and physical energy. But when the thyroid functioning slows down, the oxidizing process is banked, you might say, with the result that there is a heavy accretion of fatty tissue,—which represents the unconsumed fuel intake,—and a consequent sluggish impairment of the patient's mental and physical faculties." Both the psychiatrist and the diagnostician prescribed for you a thorough physical check-up, including a "basal metabolism" test, to show the energy-level now being afforded by the glandular chemistry of your body.

Correct Condition By Medical Treatment

When this condition and complementary symptoms have been carefully catalogued, your physician will be able to proceed with corrective treatment,—which usually includes scientifically calculated, progressively graduated doses of thyroid-stimulating drugs, administered under the doctor's direction and accompanied by a systematic supervisory study of the day-to-day results obtained; until finally the rate-of-metabolism has been restored to normal; or until the patient feels "fit as a fiddle" again. The corrective process is not as intimidating as it may sound. Under a good doctor's care, you should make a rapid and exhilarating recovery.

For the name of a good diagnostician or endocrinologist, call REpublic 6100, the Medical Bureau established by the District of Columbia Medical Society as a public convenience,—to give guidance to newcomers in their search for dependable medical care; and to make medical service available to the community 24 hours a day. Switchboard service is maintained around the clock; and persons like yourself, who might ask for a first-class endocrinologist, would be given the names of three practitioners (possibly listed in the order of preference), from which to make a choice. Also, persons needing a doctor in emergency, late at night, get prompt response by calling the bureau,—since the agency keeps an up-to-the-minute list of doctors who take "night calls," and will, if necessary, act for the patient in reaching the doctor.

Your Baby and Mine

Spoiled Babies Often Are Hungry Babies

By Myrtle Meyer Eldred

All parents have been so imbued with fear of spoiling the baby that they too easily attribute to that estate all of the natural behavior of neglected, ill-fed, unhappy children.

Up to six weeks the baby is pretty indifferent to our homage and affection. He is interested in only two things, being comfortable and having his stomach well filled. Given those two conditions he doesn't give a hoot whether he is rocked or played with or even loved. The mother who denies her small baby attention—when he cries—has only herself to blame if he builds up an emotion of neglect and insecurity which makes him a "crying" problem.

Children, after six weeks, become conscious of us as persons and of the attention we give them. They like to be loved and fondled and held. They like those attentions chiefly because they give them an emotion of security in a world which otherwise would grow strange and fearsome.

But they can get this feeling of our love and devotion and protectiveness without being held all day. Any child who cannot be comforted unless held, and then cries immediately when he is laid down, need not necessarily be spoiled. It is even more possible that he has some grievance so pronounced that he can only forget it when he is being soothed and held. The moment he is alone his unhappiness or misery or hunger flows over him and he cries again.

Children are more comfortable in a soft bed with warm, light covers than they are being dandled in someone's arms. Don't tell me, if they have never had such attentions, that they will spend their time crying for them. It is the parent who cultivates this need for artificial attention and then when she grows tired and irritable she takes it out on the child by leaving him severely alone and letting him "cry it out."

Even if a baby has been spoiled by unnecessary fondling—for he can get all he needs when he is bathed and fed and put to bed—he can get over it readily, if he is well-fed and has the assurance of a parent's devotion exhibited to him at those times when she is attending to him.

He may need a change of position, or a move to another room, or a chance to pull himself up by adult fingers, or the opportunity to like looking at different objects. The whole environment is full of allure for the child whose stomach is comfortably full.

It is a world of sorrow, no matter how much attention he gets, when he is never comfortably nor satisfyingly fed. That, as far as I am concerned, is the sole source of a baby's good disposition or of his cries for attention which his parents so often describe as "spoiled" cries.

Don't Crowd

Pans with cake batter in them should not be overcrowded in the oven, for best results. Arrange the pans so that they will not touch each other or the sides of the oven. This allows good circulation of hot air which bakes the cake. Make sure that the oven racks are even and not warped so the cake will rise evenly.

Keep Cheese Cold

Cold and covered are the watchwords for cheese. Use cottage and other soft cheese quickly, for they soon spoil. Hard, cured cheese, well wrapped, may be kept longer.

GENZIEVE REYNOLDS

"On the day after Pearl Harbor, December 8, from being your friends, we had become your allies. However curious it may seem, I believe there is no greater metamorphosis, and few situations more dangerous," declared Capt. H. Cotton Minchen, Second Secretary at the British Embassy, speaking before members of the Petworth Woman's Club yesterday at Wallace Memorial Presbyterian Church.

"Friendship carries with it essential responsibilities," he said. "I wish to God that the relationship of the ally was as readily understood and accepted. We are fighting, with our backs to the wall, against the greatest forces of evil yet unseen and the enemy will give no quarter."

He urged that the Allies think of each other in terms of generosity. "Let us put to one side the expression of dislike for certain differences between us," said Capt. Cotton Minchen. "After all, these differences are pitiable, shallow things compared to the deep purpose we have in common and the awful danger we face together."

He predicted that the Allies would be unconquerable in war and mighty cooperatives in peace as the "sure shield and sole hope" of all weaker peoples.

Mrs. R. K. Bailey, program chairman, introduced the speaker and Mrs. Frank J. MacMaugh, club president, presided. Guest of honor was Mrs. Charles P. Keyser, first vice president of the D. C. Federation of Women's Clubs. Mrs. A. C. Jewett, a new member, was received into the club.

More War Work

Wider expansion of war work activities will be formulated by the Daughters of the American Revolution at meeting in Cincinnati in April, according to an announcement made by Mrs. William H. Pouch, president general, following a meeting of the National Board of Management Wednesday.

Objective of the 52nd Congress, greatly curtailed in form, is to enlarge the war effort, and to enlist 150,000 members in an all-out effort, according to Mrs. Pouch. Attendance at the meeting will be limited to necessary officers and delegates.

Further cooperating with the Office of Defense Transportation for the elimination of travel, the Good Citizenship Pilgrims' trip has been canceled. The 49 winning senior high school girls will receive war bonds from the D. A. R. in lieu of the usual trip.

Ranks of SPARS To Be Increased

By the Associated Press

The U. S. Coast Guard announced today the nucleus of women officers from which the SPARS are to be expanded into a complete auxiliary unit.

From New London, Conn., the Annapolis of the Coast Guard, 21 specially trained women will go out Saturday and proceed immediately to stations of duty—SPAR headquarters here, or SPAR training schools as instructors, or to recruiting offices.

They'll be commissioned without ceremonial frills, for this is war and the Coast Guard Academy is working overtime. When the women conclude their classes at noon they will walk to the admiral's office, shake hands, receive their commissions and orders to proceed. No time off for leaves with family or fun, either.

To Washington headquarters are coming Lieut. (j. g.) Virginia H. Blunt, former physical education instructor at Goucher College, Baltimore, who is to head the SPARS' training programs; Ensign Jessie M. Gill of Washington, and Ensign Elizabeth Hutchison, also of Washington

Your Figure, Madame!

By Ida Jean Kain

What is your position on your job? Do you sit and bend forward? Or stand and bend forward? Do you have to lift and push? Or do you use one arm more than the other?

Whatever your working position, it makes certain muscles ache from tension at the end of a long, hard day. To get the most out of exercise, do the kind that will give these groups a rest, work others strongly, and relieve the tension. Here is a set of tension-breakers to balance the work day.

POSITION Lying face downward on floor, legs straight down, arms straight and out on floor, shoulder-level.

MOVEMENT: Raise arms and upper backward and up off floor as high as possible. At the same time, raise right leg off floor. Make the hip muscles work and keep the knee straight. Try to have the left leg perfectly relaxed as you do this and don't roll over on that side. Hold for a second, then flop down. Repeat with left leg raised.

POSITION: On back on floor, knees flexed.

MOVEMENT: Flex alternate knees to chest.

When you have completed the exercise, flex both knees and hug them to your chest. Stay in that position for a couple of minutes. It's a rest for you.

For the girl who stands at her job:

POSITION: On back on floor with small towel folded under the round outward curve at the shoulders. Flex both knees and have feet on floor close to buttocks.

MOVEMENT: Bring alternate knees to chest.

POSITION: The same, but with one leg flexed and the other straight down on floor. Stretch arms up on floor overhead

MOVEMENT: Push the left arm up on the floor and, raising left leg slightly and pointing heel slightly, try to push leg downward so that it is an inch longer than the right. In doing the exercise, keep the small of the back on the floor.

For the girl who lifts and pushes:

POSITION: Lie on back on floor with feet elevated on low bench or chair, legs straight, and arms flexed with hands on shoulders, elbows out at sides shoulder level.

MOVEMENT: Flex right leg to chest and, clenching fists, straighten arms upward on floor. Come back to position and repeat 10 times. Throughout, keep the small of the back pressed to floor.. Perform with left leg.

For the one-arm worker who usually sits on her job, the exercises should be taken standing.

The Gentler Sex

By Malvina Lindsay

A Woman's Work . . . .

The woman whose work is never done, the combination housewife—mother-war worker, may have a little help in prospect. The public school day may be extended to provide care for children during all the working hours of the working mother—a move in which the United States office of Education is interested. Also the night care of children may be provided if it becomes necessary to schedule women for night work.

However, these proposals still leave the working mother with a more than sun-to-sun job. And if 6,000,000 women are to be employed eventually as war workers, it is time that government or industry or both did something about helping them getting their manifold tasks organized. Otherwise, what they will suffer in health and bodily deterioration may be a war liability of the Nation for generations.

Apropose of a recent discussion in this column over whether or not women war workers would return home after the war one has written: "I'll say they will. If they ever live that long, they'll be so tired out and broken down, there'll be nothing else for them to do."

Another war worker reported she quit her job because she couldn't "take it" any longer. "Even though the children were taken care of during the day," she said, "I was too tired at night to cook, clean, wash and sew, and both myself and my home were going to pieces."

These women are not lacking in stamina nor in patriotism. They do not flinch at hard work or at dirty work. What oppresses them is that they never get through their multiplicity of personal and household tasks. And their fatigue is heightened because, unlike men, they cannot concentrate on the work in hand but find their minds divided among all the obligations pressing on them

That the war worker-homemaker needs aid beyond the day care of children is the belief of Mrs. Hazel Fredericksen, in charge of the day care unit of the Children's Bureau. She repeatedly comes up against the problems of women who are trying to work a six-day week and care for their families under the handicaps of wartime services and shortages.

While the day care unit does not advise mothers of very small children to work outside the home—and hopes the emergency will not be such that they will be needed—yet there are many mothers of older children who are having extremely hard going in their threefold jobs.

Services Needed

Increase of night shopping facilities would help these women to some extent, Mrs. Fredericksen believes. Centralized housekeeping services in blocks or neighborhoods or apartment houses would be desirable, she points out but—where would the women be found to "man" them?

Couldn't older women do this?

Perhaps . . . But Mrs. Fredricksen is certainly not advocating it. A recent suggestion that grandmothers be utilized in the day care of children caused a deluge of mail at the Children's Bureau from women who protested that they did not want to be relegated to taking care of children and doing housework now that they had reared their families and served their terms at kitchen work. What is more, they wanted to work in factories and munitions plants and make "good wages" like other women.

Well . . . who can blame the grandmothers? And yet the factories want women under 45.

However, despite what the factories want, there seem two things that might be done. One would be wider use of the older woman on a less strenuous factory routine. The other would be more part-time employment for mothers and housekeepers.

Part-Time Work

Industrialists would probably cry to high heaven that this would slow down production. However, is everyone in a factory or office supposed to work constantly at breakneck speed? Aren't there tasks in which skill, judgment and concentration are just as important as speed and endurance? And physical tests rather than age tests might reveal plenty of grandmothers capable of as much and as fast work as younger women.

As to part-time work, it is already being tried out successfully in some war plants in England. In these a woman may work three or four days a week, or a certain number of half days. In many cases, a partner is trained with her on a job so that their work may be coordinated. If such a plan were adopted here, no doubt many millions more women would be available, and because of less general pressure and strain, would do faster and more efficient work. Putting the woman who has home and family duties on a rigid six-day week may prove one of those foolish speed-up, high-pressure measures that often kills the goose that lays the golden egg.

State to Call Mrs. Randle Cold Killer of Boy

By Linton Burkett
Post Staff Writer

Annapolis, Md., Feb. 4.—Mrs. Helen Aileen Randle, 31, wife of Maryland and Washington horseman U. S. Randle, will be pictured at her trial as a cold killer who slew Allen Willey, 17, at the palatial Randle home in Bay Ridge simply "because she had decided he had to be eliminated," Marvin I. Anderson, Anne Arundel County State's attorney, said today.

"I believe the woman is of that class of people who have always been accustomed to doing as they please," Anderson said.

"I am convinced that she had disliked the boy to a point of hatred over a period of weeks, possibly months.

"On the day of the shooting she and her husband had quarreled, practically all day long. They had to have an audience and the Annapolis high school student was their audience. My information is that he was asked who was right in the quarrel and he had replied that the husband was.

"I also believe that Mrs. Randle deliberately hunted for the death gun and just as deliberately shot the boy in the abdomen, giving him wounds from which he died Sunday, 24 hours after he was shot."

Sergt. Brooke Meade of the Anne Arundel County police, who has charge of the investigation of the shooting, said, however, that he yet had found no convincing motive for the shooting. He said further that Randle, confined to Emergency Hospital here with a wounded leg, also said to have been inflicted by Mrs. Randle, told him that Mrs. Randle "had shot the boy while in a tantrum."

Meade also said that Randle told him the shooting was deliberate. Asked if the husband would testify against the wife, Meade replied that he would.

George B. Woelfel, attorney for Mrs. Randle, remained silent as to the defense he would make, contenting himself with the simple statement that he was confident she would be freed.

Judge Ridgely P. Melvin of the Anne Arundel County Circuit Court refused any comment on the grounds the case was not before the court and would not be until some sort of motion or grand jury action was presented.

Funeral services for the slain boy were held this morning from St. Mary's Catholic Church with the Rev. Father Lawrence Meighan, C. S. S. R., saying the requiem mass. Fellow students at Annapolis High School were pall bearers. Burial was in St. Mary's Cemetery.

Authorities continued to forbid reporters an interview with Mrs. Randle. Anderson and Meade said, however, that she continued to assert the shooting was accidental.

Reports were current today that Randle would file suit to divorce his wife, following notice in a Washington newspaper that he would not be responsible for any debts other than those contracted by him. Efforts to confirm the reports were futile, as he declined to see this reporter at the hospital, saying that he was not feeling well and was acting on orders of his physician.

This historic town was filled with rumors of the motive for the shooting. Trial Magistrate James G. Woodward repeated his story of what had taken place, saying simply the couple had been bickering all day before the shooting.

Anderson said he had reports that Randle had just recently inherited a large sum of money and the disposition of this was one of the reasons for their quarrels.

Woelfel still delayed making any effort to have Mrs. Randle freed on bail.

Anderson, who returned to the city today, said he had information that Mrs. Randle had, on occasion, ordered the Willey boy out of the house.

"I think that she believed she could do anything and get away with it, just as some people in her class think that if they want to shoot a duck out of season they can do it and get away with it," he said.

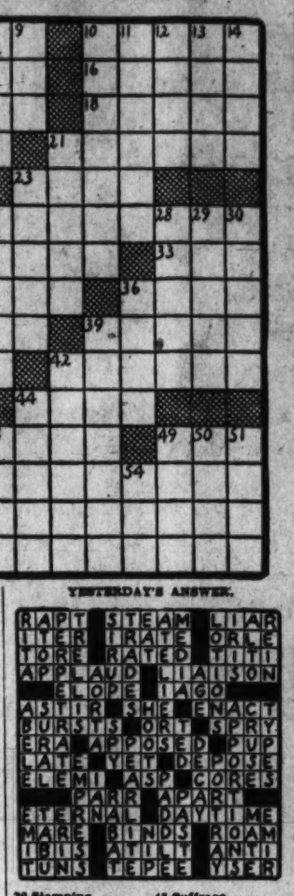
YESTERDAY'S ANSWER.



Pastor, Saved by Blood Donors, Back at Work

Grateful because his life had been spared through volunteer contributions of blood which came from an appeal first printed in The Post, the Rev. William H. Jackson, Negro minister and shoemaker, was back at his shop yesterday, still unable to take an active part in his business but anxious, nevertheless, to lend a supervising hand.

A patient in Freedmen's Hospital since October 24, during which his life "has hung in the balance several times," the minister was discharged Thursday, January 28, and his most immediate and pressing need now, friends said yesterday, is to learn to use his crutches. His right foot was amputated late in December.

When the Rev. Mr. Jackson's condition grew worse in mid-December, the hospital appealed for Type O blood to enable the 57-year-old minister to stand the ordeal of the amputation.

About 25 persons, including three naval officers, responded to the appeal, and of them, the Rev. Mr. Jackson yesterday had this to say:

"I am deeply grateful to all those who made contributions of blood, as well as to those who volunteered but were not needed. The continued interest of these friends in my welfare and their inquiries as to my progress have been a great encouragement."

The minister resides at 314 Fifty-ninth Street Northeast. His shoe repair shop is at 6038 Dix Street Northeast.

4372 Volunteer As Blood Donors

The Block Leaders Corps, in their Blood Donor Campaign conducted between January 18 and 22, have received the names of 4372 volunteer donors the District Office of Civilian Defense announced yesterday.

The pledges, which represent the first returns from 19 of the 29 areas, have been turned over to Dr. John A. Reed, chief of the Emergency Medical Services of the OCD by the Civilian Mobilization Division.

The names of volunteers who expressed a preference to give blood for military purposes will be turned over to Comm ander L. R. Newhouser, director of the Red Cross Blood Plasma Bank.

Woman Gives Class in Malay

Mrs. Franklin J. Farrington, who has had tigers in her back yard and cobras in her bathroom during 20 years' residence in the Netherlands East Indies, is in Washington teaching colloquial Malay to a few Bureau of Economic Warfare employes and working with the Red Cross.

A one-time composer of musical comedy and fiddler from Australia, she has volunteered her knowledge of colloquial Malay in hopes that some of her students, when the time comes for Allied reoccupation of the islands, will be able to move about easily, for colloquial, and not court Malay, is spoken by nearly everybody in that area.

Classes are held, gratis, twice a week and all students, from former residents of the Malayan States to prospective residents, are progressing quite well, she said. When they learn the colloquial they will be taught the pure Malay.

Appearance of the Japanese in the north of Sumatra about a year ago coincided with the departure from that section of Mrs. Farrington and her husband, then an officer of a large rubber company. The Japanese were even then patrolling the area, she said. An airliner carried them away, and the other part of their trip here was by freighter.

Before her marriage Mrs. Farrington, quite dynamic and attractive, played a violin and worked with musical comedy. As a matter of fact, she said, about two years ago she organized a show in her section of Sumatra and sent the proceeds to the American Red Cross, some $200.

One of her really painful, and enduring, experiences during her stay in the islands, she said, was that of eating chicken in 44 different forms. It seems that many of her neighbors did not hold with the refrigeration which allowed one to have beef and mutton. Chicken always was on hand.

Now living in the Dorchester House, Mrs. Farrington spends much of her time with the speakers bureau of the Red Cross and likes Washington.

OPA Official Attacks Gouging In Rents Paid by Naval Heroes

By Lee Carson
International News Service Staff Writer

Proof that "profiteering landlords" are victimizing United States Navy heroes returning for a rest from Pacific battle fronts and Atlantic convoy duty last night launched an all-out war on the home front.

Paul A. Porter, OPA deputy administrator of rents, attacked the "rent gouging" of landlords on both East and West Coasts as "a direct affront to our naval heroes."

Battle-weary sailors and officers come back from the sea, Porter charged, only to find that they must fight a losing battle against landlords determined to "flaunt rent control and squeeze the last possible nickel out of these brave men."

Citing the Vallejo, Calif., area as one of the worst offenders, the OPA said that such heroes as Comdr. Bruce McCandless of the heroic ship San Francisco, Submarine Comdr. W. G. Chapple and his men from the Philippines and South Pacific, and "too many others to mention individually," were paying "hair-raising rents for third rate—and worse—housing accommodations."

Commander McCandless reported that he and his wife couldn't find so much as one room at a price which they could afford to pay so the hero of the Solomon Islands commutes two-and-a-half hours each day from San Francisco to Vallejo.

Chapple, his wife and 7-year-old son share one room—the only one they could find—and pay $6 per day plus $13 and $15 a week for meals.

Officers and their men on the West Coast, Porter said, are paying rents ranging from $65 for two box-like rooms in an auto court to $420 a month for one room and meals.

But the same situation exists at such East Coast naval bases as Norfolk, Va., Porter declared, while San Diego, Calif.; Mobile, Ala.; Portland, Oreg., and Puget Sound, Wash., are also "bad spots for a mere Navy man," OPA stated.

The "outrage against men who are fighting for this country" is not confined to the Navy alone, Porter said, but includes Army personnel as well. Reports of violations have come from Goldsboro, N. C.; the Baltimore area, Newark, N. J.; Detroit, Mich., and other districts.

Rep. Priest Asks Biddle to Clarify Reports On Maloney Promotion in Conspiracy Trial

By Dillard Stokes
Post Staff Writer

Representative J. Percy Priest (Democrat) of Tennessee yesterday asked Attorney General Biddle to clear up the so-called "authoritative" reports that congressional pressure forced the ace prosecutor, William Power Maloney, out of the Nazi network conspiracy trial.

Maloney and his staff conducted the grand jury inquiries which brought indictment of 34 alleged conspirators on charges of plotting, with a German official, to stir up mutiny in the American armed forces. Congressional contacts of some of the alleged conspirators have been demanding his scalp for months, in speeches and letters which are widely circulated by the defendants.

Announcement last week of Maloney's promotion to be criminal trial chief of the Department of Justice was accompanied by reports that the promotion was no honor, but a device to get him out of the Nazi case in favor of a prosecutor who would pull his punches when he came to evidence that linked the alleged plotters with certain Senators and Congressmen.

"These reports are too widespread to be ignored," Representative Priest wrote the Attorney General, and, "unless cleared up certainly will place a stigma on the Congress as well as the Department of Justice."

Representative Priest said in his letter that he could not "believe that the department would in any way be even remotely a part" of such an understanding. But he said the situation caused him concern, continuing:

"In these reports the two disturbing and distasteful words, 'deal' and 'appeasement' are both written and spoken in such a way as to reflect no credit on the Department of Justice or on members of Congress."

Because Maloney—who never lost a case in eight years as a Federal prosecutor—spent nearly a year preparing the Nazi network conspiracy, Representative Priest said he doubted that another attorney, regardless of his ability, could know the evidence as well as Maloney does. The Congressman pointed out that the department's trial chiefs in past years have actively prosecuted important cases.

The reports have said Maloney would be too busy with executive routine to complete the Nazi prosecution.

"Let me assure you of my full faith in your integrity," Representative Priest told the Attorney General, "Whatever your answer may be will be accepted as the final word of truth on the subject."

Sailors' Bride Convicted Here Of Bigamy

Mrs. Grace Vivian Reinert, 20 and pretty, liked men in uniforms and married four of them, including three sailors, however, a jury in District Court convicted her yesterday of bigamy only because she was still married to sailor No. 2 when she married sailor No. 3.

Assistant United States Attorney Bernard Margolius, who prosecuted the case, told the jury that Mrs. Reinert made a bus trip to Washington from Norfolk, Va., last November 11 and bigamously married Harry James McKenny, a sailor attached to the Norfolk base, when her legal husband, Kenneth Francis Reinert, machinist's mate, was stationed here.

Mrs. Reinert's first marriage to a sailor ended December 7, 1941, when her husband was killed at Pearl Harbor. Her original marriage was to a Kansas City policeman in 1938 when Mrs. Reinert was 14. This marriage ended in divorce, she testified.

At the time of her arrest last fall Mrs. Reinert was living in Washington with Reinert and was working at a filling station on Massachusetts Avenue Northwest.

On motion of defense attorneys Justice Matthew F. McGuire referred the case to the probation office because Mrs. Reinert is expecting a child.

The Soldier Bouvier, a Hero At 17, He Deserted to Fight

Is Only 'Common Soldier' Awarded Cross of Liberation, Highest French Order

By Clyde A. Farnsworth

Cairo (Correspondence of the Associated Press).—This was the soldier Bouvier who once went A. W. O. L. to fight for France, as brave a lad as I have ever met, a mere boy with his decorations and his empty sleeve.

With remarkable nonchalance he sauntered into the lounge of Cairo's principal hotel. Without even a first class private's chevron, he ignored the posted notice which attempts to keep this place out of bounds to "other ranks."

He looked so young, even younger than his bare 18 years, but he held himself so straight. His dark hair was parted and slicked to schoolboy perfection. His face, with its easy, eager smile, had the pink beardlessness of adolescence, yet there was a strange adult light in his eyes when he looked at you.

Swiftly you took in the boyish face and the crossed cannon and medieval helmets on the lapels of his khaki blouse, insignia of the Fighting French armored forces, and then you saw the empty sleeve tucked neatly into his right-hand pocket, and the odd stiffness of his left hand with which he shook hands.

Last of all you studied the row of ribbons over his heart. There was, first of all, the ribbon standing for the Cross of Liberation, highest award given by the Fighting French, and in this case the only one held by a common soldier.

This rectangle of ribbon is pale green, crossed by two diagonal black bars—green for hope in the future of France and black in mourning for the past. It is the same kind of ribbon which carries the Bronze Cross, not always worn but which Bouvier later showed to me. The cross is a sword mounted on a square of bronze, the blade of the sword with the cross of Lorraine superimposed on it. On the reverse side is written:

"Patriam Servando Victoriam Tulit."

Next to the ribbon for the Cross of Liberation, Bouvier wore one standing for the Croix de Guerre and against its gray field lay a tiny bronze palm. In the same array of decorations were ribbons for the Medaille Coloniale, the Medaille de Blesse for those wounded in the service of France and, last of all, one with a tiny bronze plate superimposed and engraved:

"Bir Hakheim

A Veteran Soldier At Seventeen

It was there, on last June 8, that Leon Bouvier, then 17 years old but already a veteran of this war, was wounded: one arm stump, and the remaining hand so injured that he retains the use of but three fingers.

In the official record of the Fighting French defense of Bir Hakheim, a battle which lasted 15 days, May 27 to June 11, there is a factual, impersonal entry: "Monday, June 8, a convoy arrived this morning at 4 a. m. The trucks were driven by French drivers of a transport unit, all volunteers for this mission."

Bouvier, then driver of a Bren gun carrier, had set out with that mission of relief for the encircled, embattled defenders of Bir Hakheim. He was to have escorted the trucks, 15 in all, loaded with explosives and other supplies, into Bir Hakheim. He never. But let Bouvier tell the story:

"It was getting on toward the end for Bir Hakheim. The Germans and Italians had thrown a complete ring about the place. Bir Hakheim is nothing, merely a geographical point in the Libyan Desert. Do you know what Bir Hakheim really is? It's just two rain barrels set one on top of the other. There is not even a well there. We had to be supplied with everything, even water.

"I was driving a Bren carrier. We came up at night with 170 trucks, arriving outside the German lines at 11 o'clock. We had a rendezvous with Second Lieut. Jean Bellec and two soldiers from inside Bir Hakheim. They had come through the enemy lines and were to lead us in.

'They Called For Volunteers'

"But there were too many trucks and Bellec said that not more than 15 could be taken in, and even then only if we proceeded slowly and carefully and as quietly as possible. They called for volunteers to drive. I volunteered to go along in my Bren carrier and took with me Bellec and one of the soldiers who had come out with him. We had 3 miles to cross.

"Our column crawled along, stopping often in the dark. At 1 a. m. all hell broke loose. We were attacked by Stukas, which dropped flares. We were in the middle of the German lines and they opened up with everything they had. We were in a crossfire of machine guns. Tracers were everywhere.

"One of the trucks was hit somehow and the fuel tank took fire. My Bren carrier was close. I knew that the truck was loaded with 20 cases of mines and that there also was one case of fuses for them. I knew that if the fire ever reached the fuses the mines would be set off, and I was sure the explosion would destroy us all.

"So I took the fire extinguisher from my Bren carrier and ran to the fire to put it out. It was already eating into the cases of mines. I was there in the light of the fire and I knew I was exposed, for bullets were striking all around me. I actually put the fire out.

"But at that moment, just as I was leaving to find cover, something must have hit the box of fuses. It might have been machine-gun fire. The truck flew up. There were, as I said, 20 cases of mines, each with 20 unfused mines in it—400 in all.

"I was blown I don't know how far, but a considerable distance. I could feel myself flying through the air. Most of my clothing was ripped off. When I picked myself up the lower half of my right arm was gone and I was bleeding horribly. There was no one around. It was dark. I feared to call for help for I knew I would be captured.

"My left thumb was shorn off at the first joint and the tendon of the forefinger was cut. I had burns on my arms and body. The hand hurt fiercely. I had great pain in the back of my head but I could feel no pain in the stump of my right arm. I knew that I would bleed to death in a few minutes. I felt faint. I was covered with blood from head to foot.

Made Tourniquet Of Knife Chain

"I had nothing to make a tourniquet except the knife chain which I carried from my belt. With the three good fingers of my left hand I took it off. There was a leather loop at the belt end of it. I managed to get the chain through this loop and fastened it around what was left of my arm. I pulled it tight with my teeth.

"I fainted as soon as I did this but somehow managed to keep the chain pulled tight. I clamped my jaws on it. Even when I was unconscious I kept the chain drawn tight. If the chain had loosened or broken I would have died.

"I don't know how long I lay there but it was still night when I heard voices. I thought the Germans had come. I was ready then to surrender. I grunted or moaned for help. I could not open my mouth to cry out for the chain would have loosened. But they were not Germans; they were a Scottish patrol of seven men who had seen the bombardment and the fire and had wormed their way into the place to investigate. The rest of the convoy had moved on.

"They gathered me up like a baby and carried me back to an ambulance. From there on I do not remember much. They cut off some of my right arm in a field hospital, I know. They were constantly giving me morphine injections. The retreat from Libya was now fully under way. Bir Hakeim was evacuated while I was being moved back for treatment.

"They tried to get me into an ambulance plane once but there was space for only one man. It was given to a wounded officer. I was given over to an ambulance driver who was instructed to carry me back until he could find a hospital for me. We did not find it until we reached Alexandria. I spent seven days in the ambulance."

'Been Kissed by Five Generals'

Bouvier paused. The story was nearly ended. He glanced at his empty sleeve and the medals which he wore like a Boy Scout proud of his merit badges. He grinned. "I always wanted to be a hero," he said. "I have been kissed now by five generals."

There is one forgivable demerit in the military record of the soldier Bouvier. He was with the Fighting French in Syria when the rumor spread around the camp that General Koenig's brigade, the troops which later were to defend Bir Hakheim, was to move into Libya.

"I went first to my commanding officer and asked if I might be transferred so I could go along," Bouvier related. The C. O. told me there was nothing official. So I went to General Koenig. He told me that if I wanted to go I should merely get aboard one of the trucks when the brigade left. That is what I did."

Weeks later when Bouvier, by that time a clerk in Koenig's mobile headquarters, had moved up to Halfaya Pass near the Libyan border of Egypt, a letter came from general headquarters asking Koenig for information on "the deserter Bouvier."

"The general had others who could have typed the answer for him but he dictated it to me instead," the boy recalled. "I remember so well. He stood beside me and dictated: "The soldier Bouvier has deserted to fight'."

'Take Your Place in the Sun to Keep Fit'

By Peggy Preston

"Rebuild energy by storing up energy."

In other words, spend one day out of seven in the open air and sun if you expect to take your place in the successful parade of business women who give over their evening hours to war work. At least that is the formula advocated by Muriel H. Hinds, British-born secretary at the National Geographic Magazine, and Director of the A. W. V. S., Night Training School.

"We have discovered that if we give in to the natural impulse to spend a lazy Sunday at home, our work suffers the rest of the week," says this golden-haired young career woman, who makes a practice of practicing what she preaches.

By the "we," she refers to her fellow executive officers in A. W. V. S., who for the past two years have spent four or five nights a week in training the 2,000 volunteer night workers affiliated with the organization.

"It doesn't make much difference what kind of exercise you take," she goes on, "Just so long as you do it out-of-doors. A good brisk wall: through the park will do the trick. . . provided you make the walk long enough."

But what may come as a duty task to many is a natural delight to Miss Hinds, who has spent a good many years of her life scaling mountain heights in Switzerland and fishing along the banks of streams in New York's Adirondacks.

A naturalized American citizen, Muriel Hinds, came to Washington about ten years ago. Her father, a civilian attached to the British Army, took his family to the Rhine following the last war, where he was engaged in work for the British government.

During her first few years here, she was church secretary at St. Mark's Episcopal Church, and later went with National Geographic, where by virtue of her knowledge of languages, she holds the position as secretary to the chief of the foreign editorial staff.

Her day's work done at the office, Muriel Hinds turns up three nights a week at A. W. V. S. headquarters ready to take over the administrative end of a job that has continued to grow with each passing month of the war.

The classes, over which Miss Hinds has full and complete control, are especially designed for business women, who are interested in helping out the program set up by the OCD.

One of the courses in which Miss Hinds is most particularly interested is the Two-Way radio course, a six-hour course of instruction in the rules and regulations governing the FCC radio. "Girls taking this course can go on to be of real service in the war," she says. "Many of our students have left here to enter the radio sections of the WAACS or the WAVES."

And with an eye to her pet theory, that physical well being is essential to the woman who hopes to do two jobs, Muriel Hinds puts accent on a night course in massage and fatigue treatment.

"Students are taught the methods of relieving muscle and nerve strain, so that workers may receive treatment after work which will enable them to go back on their job the next day with as much freshness and alertness as possible," she says.

Theodora Roosevelt, Dancer, Back From Tour of Brazil

President's Fifth Cousin Likes the South Americans and Vice Versa

Theodora Roosevelt, second cousin to Mrs. Roosevelt and the President's fifth, who preferred to be a dancer rather than a debutante, is home again after a stay of eight months in Brazil—a visit which somehow stretched from what had originally been planned as a six weeks dance tour.

It wasn't the unlimited amount of coffee that kept her there. It was simply that both she and her dance partner, Alexander Iolas, like South America and the South Americans like their dancing.

At the home of her mother, Mrs. Archibald Roosevelt, in New York are dozens of scrapbooks filled with triumphant press notices which attest to that fact. And Miss Roosevelt and her dancing partner left Rio de Janeiro with an elastic contract, one they can take up any moment, which they propose to do after giving several performances in this country.

In Rio the dance team appeared at the exclusive Copacabana but they also danced for the "man in the street," at Sao Paulo, where the governor sponsored a special performance at reasonable prices. Miss Roosevelt and Mr. Iolas learned the samba while in Brazil, a dance which Mr. Iolas describes as more exciting than any jitterbug. "South American swing is more voluptuous," he explains. Audiences move shoulders and hips much in the fashion of the adolescent Americans listening to a jive band when the samba and chorino is danced.

The two dancers stopped overnight in Trinidad on the flying trip home. They left the day before President Roosevelt arrived, but even though the rest of the world was unaware of the President's schedule everyone there knew he was coming, said Miss Roosevelt. "On a little island like that it's hard to keep the news."

In Brazil Miss Roosevelt found many natives who had known her grandfather, "T. R." There was one old man, an Indian guide who had been on a hunting trip with the first President Roosevelt. He is no longer an Indian guide but is "in politics" now.

Credit for encouraging Theodora Roosevelt to take up dancing goes to her paternal grandmother, Mrs. Theodore Roosevelt, this successful danseuse says. One of the team's four professional appearances on this continent occurred at Huntington, Long Island, so that Mrs. Roosevelt could see them dance. The others took place in New England.

Outstanding in their dance repertoire is the satire on the conjugal life of the Greek gods. Salvador Dali designed the costumes, which together weigh 26 pounds. "A bit difficult to dance in" the partners agree.

Here Are a Few Facts, Instead of Random Fancies, About Who Has Taken Over Suites in Washington's Newest Hotel The Source? Arthur Douglas, the Man Who Built It

On the Facts and Figures Front:

With rumors running rampant about Washington's newest hotel, The Statler, it's high time somebody gets a few items straight. After a brief talk yesterday with the one man who should, and does, know what it's all about, I'm prepared to correct some of the erroneous impressions now making the rounds by that well-known Washington grapevine. The man is Arthur Douglas, vice president of the Statler Hotels, Inc., who has been in charge of the Washington project for his company since one evening, about two years ago, when he and Jesse Jones made a few plans over an after-dinner cup of coffee.

Scene of that historic and impromptu conference was a Gridiron dinner, and Arthur Douglas had arrived with his brother, Supreme Court Justice William O. Douglas. Later, he and Jesse Jones fell to talking, as does almost everybody in Washington, about crowded conditions hereabouts. Douglas averred that he was considering the possibilities of building a new hotel here. Jones said that would be a good thing, a mighty good thing. Well, to put a long story into a short sentence, before that cup of coffee was finished, plans for Washington's Statler were full speed ahead.

Just to Keep the Record Straight . . .

And now that the hotel is opened, and doing business to a crowded house daily, here are a few things you might like to know about it:

The Harry Hopkinses do not have an apartment there; have never asked for one; have never, so far as Arthur Douglas knows, wanted one. Truth of the matter is, The Statler is to cater entirely to transient trade for at least two years, and maybe longer. "You see we figured it this way," said Douglas. "If we took in permanent guests, we could please no more than 1000 persons at most. Out-of-towners who come here on business still would be left without a place to stay. So we're making it a rule to accommodate guests for only a few days."

Mrs. Roosevelt has not taken over a couple of suites for White House guests. "Don't know where that rumor started," Douglas said with a grin. "Where the others did, I guess. Anyway, it's not true either."

The Navy has not taken over a couple of floors at The Statler, no matter what you've heard; and neither has any Government department. That rumor came to Douglas' ear from a taxicab driver the other day. "Are you sure about that?" Douglas asked. "Positive," said the driver. "The Navy has two whole floors, and another Government department has another floor. The White House has taken over two of the biggest suites, and Harry Hopkins is going to live in another one."

Mrs. Douglas Fetes Two Visitors

"Of course," chuckled Douglas, "I've long since found out that you can hear practically anything in Washington." He had stopped by the table where Mrs. William O. Douglas was entertaining a small group in honor of her sister, Mrs. Lloyd Byron Pierce of La Grande, Oreg., and Mrs. Royal Hauer of Connecticut, sister of Mrs. Thurman Arnold. For most of us in the group, the visit to The Statler was the first . . . and I must say we were enchanted with the dining room where violet walls blend into soft shades of mulberry, neatly patterned with cream-colored panels and borders. That's going to be a mighty popular spot; and judging by the number of Navy officers I saw there, it's no wonder the rumor is getting around that "the Navy has taken over The Statler." In a way, it has.

Getting a mammoth hotel built, its staff organized, and its business started is all in the line of duty for Douglas. He has been at work of that sort for some time. But back in his college days he hadn't the remotest idea that was to be his career. Like his brother Bill he studied to be a lawyer, and was a very successful one—for a decade. As legal counsel for a number of hotel owners he got interested in hotels, and when a vacancy came up in the Statler organization, he agreed to fill it.

Runs 25,000-Acre Farm in Oregon

"Yes, it's a fascinating business, but mighty difficult in times like these," he said. "The whole thing's so strenuous I'm glad to get away from hotels entirely, as often as possible." His haven is his home in Bronxville, N. Y. . . . and he has another haven, even farther removed—a farm in Vermont. But right now, there's a lot of hotel business that may keep him away from both for quite a while. There's still much work to be done here before The Statler is running as smoothly as Douglas thinks it should . . . and there's the hope—his hope—that before long, he may be busy completing plans for a Statler hotel in Chicago.

And now for just a bit more about Mrs. Douglas' luncheon yesterday. The hostess' sister, who arrived here from her home near La Grande, Oreg., a few days ago, plans to stay until the end of the month. "And then, I'll simply have to get back to the farm; there's so much to be done," she said. She added, incidentally, that "the farm" is a 25,000-acre affair; that she runs it herself; that most of it is under cultivation ("war crops, you know"), and that the life of a farmer (you don't call them farmerettes away out West) is the most fascinating pursuit in the world.

IN THE CAPITAL SPOTLIGHT

New Senator Wives Face Capital Housing Problem

The wives of the new members of the Senate are taking the Capital housing problem seriously. Most of them are staying in their home States until they have a definite Washington address.

Mrs. Harlan J. Bushfield is clearing up matters in her South Dakota household and is planning to join her husband here in three or four weeks. Mrs. E. H. Moore is in Tulsa, Okla., for the moment, but is expecting to entrain for Washington in about two weeks. Mrs. George A. Wilson is still in Iowa, but is packing her bags for a Capital sojourn. She will arrive in several weeks. But it's to be Nevada for her husband's Capital duration for Mrs. James G. Scrugham.

War will have its way. The senatorial wifely line-up now is far different from that of past years, when the wives of newly elected Senators dashed back to Washington to applaud from the galleries when their husbands were inducted into membership on the Hill.

Washington Girls Receive Honors

Two Washingtonians have been selected for special honors at Rosary College, River Forest, Ill., where they are students.

Miss Peg Dawkins, daughter of Mrs. M. H. Dawkins, and Miss Rose Klingenhagen, daughter of Capt. and Mrs. Fred J. Klingenhagen, have been elected to membership in Torch, the activity honor society.

Purely Personal

The Ambassador of Ecuador, Capt. Colon Eloy Alfaro, canceled the dinner he was to have given in honor of Dr. Fausto Navarro Allende last evening at the Mayflower. The affair will be postponed indefinitely until Dr. Allende, vice president of the Ecuadorean senate, recovers from an illness.

The Chinese Ambassador and Mme. Wei have returned to Washington after a brief stay in New York at the Ambassador.

The Icelandic Minister and Mme. Thors have gone to New York for a stay at the Waldorf-Astoria.

Mrs. William H. King entertained a few friends at luncheon Wednesday at the Water Gate Inn. Her guests included Mrs. Carl Droop Mrs. Huron W. Lawson and Mrs. Guy Withers.

Mrs. Charles Page Perin has left Washington for New York, where she will spend the winter at Mayfair House.

Mrs. Walter Wyatt will entertain today at a small luncheon in her Kalmia Road home in honor of Mrs. Horace Albright of New York.

Mrs. Paul H. Bastedo is spending a few days in New York at the Plaza

Capt. George Hill Oliver of the Transportation Corps and Mrs. Oliver have moved from their Porter Street home to New York, where they will live at 15 Washington Place, East.

Miss Crawford Betrothed to D. S. Campbell

Mr. and Mrs. David L. Crawford announce the engagement of their daughter, Joan, to David S. Campbell.

Miss Crawford studied in Hawaii, where her father was president of the University of Hawaii for many years. She was graduated from Pomona College in California and did graduate work at Fletcher School of Law and Diplomacy in Massachusetts. She is a member of Mortar Board and has a pilot's license.

Mr. Campbell did his preparatory study at Wayland Academy in Beaver Dam, Wis., and was graduated from the University of Chicago, where he also did graduate study.

Mexican Envoy to Russia Is Given Farewell Party

Honoring the guest of honor, Dr. Luis Quintanilla, newly appointed Mexican Minister to Russia, and surprising all the guests at the luncheon yesterday at the Mayflower, Vice President Henry A. Wallace opened his after-luncheon speech in Russian, then switched to Spanish, then to English and finally back to Spanish.

The Vice President, who has been studying Russian recently and has won recognition in Latin America with his knowledge of Spanish and Portuguese, was toastmaster at the affair. Later Andrei A. Gromkyo, Soviet Embassy Counselor, said Vice President Wallace spoke Russian "very well for a beginner."

Yesterday's event, given in honor of Dr. Quintanilla by a group of friends of long standing, was arranged by Manuel Giron-Cerna of the radio division of the Coordinator of Inter-American Affairs, who has known Dr. Quintanilla since they both came to Washington a number of years ago.

Incidentally Dr. Quintanilla almost missed the affair in his honor due to "inoculation trouble." For one of the final jobs of the departing envoy was to get himself inoculated against such ailments as cholera, smallpox, typhoid and diphtheria. So, Dr. Quintanilla took all of them, or almost all of them on Wednesday and they really got him down. So much so that he was able to get up yesterday only just in time to attend the luncheon and then had to return home immediately.

The Mexican Ambassador, Dr. Francisco Castillo Najera, was there and the Chilean Ambassador, Rodolfo Michels; the Cuban Ambassador, Dr. Aurelio Concheso, who has been named Cuban Ambassador to the Soviet Union in addition to the post here. Others were the Ambassador of Bolivia, Dr. Luis Fernando Guachalla the Minister of Guatemala, Dr. Adrian Recinos; the Minister of Nicaragua, Dr. Leon De Bayle; the Minister of Honduras, Dr. Julian Caceres, the Minister of the Dominican Republic, Dr. J. M. Troncoso, the Minister of Haiti, Dr. Andre Liautaud

Nelson Rockefeller was in the group and still others were Dr. L. S. Rowe, Lawrence Duggan of the State Department; Dr. Pedro de Alba, Milo Perkins, William Manger, Roberto Cordova Counselor of the Mexican Embassy; Andrei A. Gromyko, Counselor of the Soviet Embassy; Dr. Raul Diez de Medina, Counselor of the Bolivian Embassy; Dr. Juan Elguera, Counselor of the Peruvian Embassy; Angel Rosas, Counselor of the Mexican Embassy; Carlos Campbell, Counselor of the Chilean Embassy; Carlos Dorado Chopitea, First Secretary of the Bolivian Embassy.

The Diplomatic Corps was further represented by Fernando Illanez of Chile, Nicolas Rivero of Cuba, Elie Garcia of Haiti, Fernando de Medeiros of Brazil, Jorge Escalante of Argentina, Salvador Duhart of Mexico, Eduardo Espinosa of Mexico, Eugenio de Anzorena, Miguel Penaloza, Enrique Elizondo, Carlos Chapoy and Ruperto de Leon Garza who have been appointed secretaries of the Mexican Legation in Russia. Also from the Mexican Embassy staff were the Naval Attache, Comdr. Garcia Jurado; the Assistant Naval Attache, Enrique C. Alomia; Col. Calderon, Military Attache to the Mexican Legation in Kuibyshev.

Then there were Thomas Burke of the State Department, Edgar Morris, J. D. Lecron, Dr. Atherton Lee, Leon Pearson, William Lander, Manuel Martinez, Francisco Hernandez, Francisco Aguilera, Alberto Barreto, T Shaw, William Suro, Richard Pattee, Joseph McGurk, John Carrigan, Dr. Tomas Cajigas, Ernesto Gallarza and Dean Henry Grattan Doyle.

'The Palm Beach Story' Is Richly Hilarious Fable

Preston Sturges Hits Bull's-eye at Capitol; Brief Stage Revue Is Off the Top Shelf

"THE PALM BEACH STORY." Paramount picturization of an original screen comedy, both written and directed by Preston Sturges, costarring Claudette Colbert and Joel McCrea, with Rudy Vallee, Mary Astor, William Demarest, Franklin Pangborn, Robert Dudley, Sig Arno, Jack Norton, Esther Howard, Jimmy Conlin, George Anderson, Harry Hayden, Monte Blue, Dewey Robinson, Esther Michelson, Robert Warwick, Torben Meyer, Robert Greig, Chester Conklin and Roscoe Ates. At Loew's Capitol Theater.

THROWING THE GREAT DIAPASON wide open on his own particular brand of "sophisticated" comedy, Preston Sturges, in "The Palm Beach Story," has both written and directed something extra special in the way of hilarious screengazing.

Not only has Mr. Sturges done the amusement-seeking public a vast service, but he has rolled Paramount's score for quick-on-the-trigger comedy up to something approaching a record for the season. "The Palm Beach Story," now at Loew's Capitol, belongs in the same category as the same company's "The Major and the Minor" and "Road to Morocco" as a laugh-getter. It was created purely for adult fun and smacks the target right in the middle of the bull's-eye.

Barring a hectic "prologue" and an equally frantic and astonishing final scene, the acutely ridiculous and satirical tale is of familiar mold. It is the one about the beautiful young wife who, a little weary of dodging the bill collectors, decides that the only way to be of real usefulness to her ambitious but ineffectual husband is to leave him and go after the $99,000 on the sheer basis of personal allure. Miami seems the most likely hunting-ground, so she barges out for there without benefit of train fare or even a wisp of baggage—a deficiency that is made up by a chivalrous display of impetuous generosity by the Ale and Quail Club, en route with guns, rum and dogs to their annual escape from tribulation. On the train, the job of fairy godfather is taken over, under most extraordinary circumstances, by the third in line to a great fortune, whose identity is more or less conclusively established by the facts that his yacht is christened "The Erl King" and his tip to the porter for the New York to Jacksonville run is a dime!

The thread of domestic debacle, tenuously attaching Gerry Jeffers and her highly indignant husband in an inseparable bond, is never broken by the bizarre adventures that befall both during their "estrangement." Mr. Sturges has pitched his fable in a high key and never—well, hardly ever—let it down.

If there is ever a period in the playful goings-on when the author and director permits his frolic to get slightly out of hand, it is in the interval during which the close-harmony boys of the Ale and Quail Club convert their private Pullman car into an impromptu skeet range—thus affording Gerry, entangled in a suit of Robert Warwick's pajamas, an opportunity to escape to the figuratively wide-open arms of Mr. John D. Hackensacker III. One is led to suspect that it was "corn" the gentlemen of the Ale and Quail were quaffing out of all those bottles and that they passed Mr. Sturges a sizable and surreptitious snort. Otherwise, the picture is just one continuous round of rollicking and delightful nonsense—from the moment when the quaint little "Weinie King" appears in the bankrupt Jeffers apartment as a prospective lessee and endows Gerry with enough "lettuce" off a Gargantuan bankroll to pay all the bills and later performs a similar act of largesse to Tom to enable him to go in pursuit of his wife. That last scene, incidentally, is as hilarious as the first in its propounding of the proposition that "They lived happily ever after—or did they?"

Cast a Revelation of Unsuspected Talents

"The Palm Beach Story" could have been a pretty inconsequential exhibit without the velvety services of as glossy a cast as Mr. Sturges and Paramount have assembled. Claudette Colbert, as the fugitive wife, has a role perfectly fitted to her high talents as a comedienne, who can make even the most extravagant eccentricities seem plausible, and plays it for all it is worth—which is a lot, if sheer, unadulterated fun is the objective. Joel McCrea, as Tom Jeffers, is no less efficient and effective in projecting the constant impression of bafflement and rage. The surprise of surprises, however, is the smooth skill with which Rudy Vallee plays the comedy character part of the third Hackensacker. It is a jewel of a job. And so is Mary Astor's impersonation of his screwball sister, on the make for another husband, so far down the line that she can't even keep their numbers straight or remember their names. Robert Dudley, as the little gent with the fabulous frankfurter fortune, and Sig Arno, as Toto, the parasite, also contribute enormously to the enveloping goofiness of it all. If production cost was held to the theoretical $5000 minimum, then diamonds are selling for a penny a karat!

The new stage bill at the Capitol is brief but of top grade. Sam Jack Kaufman's "Gypsy" overture is really the first "act," since it introduces the violin virtuosity of Jeanne Brideson, a brilliant and buoyant young artiste, who shares solo eminence with Lynn Allison's vocal interludes. The Rhythm Rockets' "Magic Violins" number—a little long, even with the spectacular effect of the phosphorescent fiddles—leads colorfully into Miss Brideson's "Begin the Beguine" encore on the stage. Pat Henning, monologist par excellence, intervenes at this point with a burst of moderately low comedy, and the Salici Puppets, the ultima thule of this form of entertainment, concludes the bill, save for the Rockets' parasol routine. All very nice.

Art Brown's perpetually popular "organized" singing and the Fox Movietone News are the added auxiliaries of the Sturges genius for fanciful and sure-fire frivolity.

Palace

The obvious relish with which patrons are pouring into the Palace Theater this week, attests to the fact that the spirit of adventure and life on the high seas is far from perishing. Held over for a second week, "The Black Swan" is a roaring swashbuckling yarn of the days when pirates roamed the Caribbean.

With the benefit of a Technicolor treatment that does it anything but harm, "The Black Swan" embodies all the color and excitement of those fabulous years which hold so much fascination for today's more venturous-minded.

Tyrone Power and Maureen O'Hara are costarred in this latest version of Rafael Sabatini yarn—he as James Waring, strong right arm to the almost-mythical Henry Morgan; she as a daughter of royalty who is snatched from her comfort and security to the arms of the brazen pirate.

In accepting a role as he has ever had, Tyrone Power swings from one burning ship to another, crosses cutlasses with many, and matches endearing adjectives with Miss O'Hara.

The supporting cast finds Laird Cregar as the Captain Morgan, George Sanders as the red-bearded scoundrel, Captain Leach, and Thomas Mitchell as a pirate with a heart of (and for) gold.

A Guest of the Ale and Quail Club!

To Riddle Hitler Myth

Hollywood, Cal., Feb. 4—Walt Disney is back east conferring with Hooten of Harvard—that famous anthropologist. Which means they're working out plans for a picture debunking Hitler's theories on what makes a perfect Nordic man. Walt also will look in on Washington and Ford's Willow Run plant outside Detroit. Great man, that Disney. . . Hal Wallis signed that fine actress, Florence Bates, for "Saratoga Trunk." Speaking of Hal, exhibitors throughout the country are wiring him to find out that title of his next picture 'cause they want to know which way the war's going. . . Orson Wells has to get friendly with a dog—a Great Dane, no less. Dog doesn't love him, but has to in "Jane Eyre." The dog's trainer will really find out how good an actor Orson is.

WALT DISNEY

What's In a Voice?

One reason Lucille Ball is better at Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer than at R.-K.-O. is that she's found a new voice in the person of Trudy Erwin of Kay Kyser's band. Now I'm wondering if Rita Hayworth's refusal to do that Columbia picture is because she lost her singing voice, which belongs to Nan Wynn—'cause Nan's back East making her own name count . . . Did you know that Joe Stalin kept every motion picture theater open 24 hours a day in the vicinity of Leningrad and Stalingrad during the entire time of siege? There's a man who recognizes the value of pictures and makes the most of it . . . Drew Pearson's story about "For Whom the Bell Tolls" being shelved because of political pressure, etc., has made more friends for us. Thousands of fans are writing Paramount, saying, "Are you going to allow Franco to run Hollywood and your business? This is your chance to show the stuff you're made of." Well, believe me, we're not going to muff it this time. And the studio's now doing added scenes with Cooper and Bergman, making it stronger.

Bandsmen Gang Up

Famous bandleaders decided to get together in their pictures, like Hope and Crosby, even though they're not supposed to be in them. So Harry James and Tommy Dorsey appeared on Kay Kyser's set to do a stunt in his movie. After the first rehearsal, Kay said, "Hey, fellows, look! Don't make it too good. Remember, I'm supposed to be the star!" . . . A young lieutenant at a recent opening, after being introduced to Irene Dunne, Mary Pickford, Hedy Lamarr and Janet Gaynor, turned to his host and said "I haven't had such a thrill since I was 7, and my mother took me to the zoo."

Unfair Exchange

After Mary Boland sold her house to Rosalind Russell she went out and rented rooms for herself, and says: "With all the confusion of moving I'll probably end up sleeping in the baby's basinette, and the baby will be playing with my pin ball game." Mary will do a new play called "The Legend of Lue"—sort of based on that fabulous character, Klondike Kate. Sounds good, wot? . . . Charles Boyer forgot he was the perfect lover when the rains came and part of his roof blew off the house. He was far too busy with the bucket brigade, trying to save furniture and draperies, to remember that he was an actor . . . At last Betty Grable was seen out dancing without George Raft. The lucky man was Van Johnson, and they were giving it the works at Mocambo.

Without Headlines

Walter Pidgeon in a jam, trying to explain his embarrassment at getting a Charley horse at the wrong moment . . . A pre-war party, with champagne flowing like water, given by Mrs. Jack Oakie when she closed her valley home, got no headlines like that party in Washington, even thought there were many motion picture stars present. The crowd stayed on for bacon and eggs at 4 a. m. Everybody had a hilarious time except the hostess, who was so busy seeing that everybody was happy that no one asked her to dance, and there wasn't a place left for her at the table.

Gossip From Gotham

New York, Feb. 4.

Gertrude Stein, the surrealist American writer, who is living in the south of France, completed her new book, "Mrs. Reynolds." The only way she could get the manuscript out of the occupied nation was via the mails to Sweden. She mailed it to her friend there, Theresa Bonney, whose photographs of Miss Stein recently appeared in Vogue . . . The author requested Miss Bonney to deliver that manuscript to Random House, the New York publishers. Miss Bonney didn't bring that manuscript with her to New York, but mailed it from Sweden to the publisher. If she brought it, she reasoned, the censors would have examined Gertrude Stein's incomprehensible pages and then would have had to detain Miss Bonney until they could break down this "code."

"You're the Chief Justice," the little girl answered. "And you used to be President Coolidge."

Harpo Marx, who is flying to England, was reminiscing of his last trip to Europe with Alexander Woolcott, who introduced him to Mr. and Mrs. George Bernard Shaw. While Mrs. Shaw tapped a spoon against the table, impatiently, her husband told them of Ellen Terry. He rose often during the recital to illustrate just how Miss Terry walked across the stage. Shaw was positive that he was captivating Harpo with his story, for the comic never removed his eyes from the playwright's chin . . . "Just a moment," Harpo said during a pause, and parted Shaw's beard. "Just as I thought," Harpo announced. Shaw wasn't wearing a collar.

Columbia

Stamping out the fires that menace valuable timber tracts has come a long way since the old ditch-digging and water-pump days. Not that these methods are out-moded, but the advent of radio and the airplane have made fire prevention a science in itself. All this is very pleasantly diagrammed at the Columbia Theater in the Technicolor film entitled "Forest Rangers."

"Forest Rangers" boasts some breathtaking views of America at its best—and a competent cast headed by Fred MacMurray, Paulette Goddard and Susan Hayward.

RKO-Keith's

As a reward for its excellent job of entertaining those who are seeking sheer escapist forms of pleasure, "Arabian Nights" is being held for a third week at RKO-Keith's Theater.

Jon Hall, Maria Montez, Sabu and Leif Erikson are the principals who enact the important roles in the Technicolor love story concerning Haroun-Al-Raschid and Scheherazade.

Satterlee Girl May Be Older Than 16, Flynn Counsel Hints

By the Associated Press

Los Angeles, Feb. 4.—The defense, switching tactics in its closing argument against the conviction of Errol Flynn on morals charges, suggested today that Peggy La Rue Satterlee, who accuses the actor of seduction, may in fact be older than the 16 years she claims.

"Her birth certificate says she is 16 years of age," said Defense Attorney Jerry Giesler in concluding his summation, "but this may be outweighed by other evidence."

The defense also suggested to the jury trying the actor for alleged statutory rape that Peggy was trying to prevent prosecution of a friend for an abortion which she assertedly underwent.

"She knew she had committed a criminal act in which she and a friend could be involved," Giesler said. "Having once told a lie, Peggy Satterlee had to go through with it."

Deputy District Attorney John Hopkins, in his final rebuttal summation, said he did not know what steps would be taken against Peggy or her friend, who has not been identified in court.

Giesler, in suggesting that Miss Satterlee may be older than the 16 years she claims, cited her application for an automobile driver...s license more than a year ago, in which he said she gave her age as 18. He mentioned also her applications for various jobs, in which she listed herself sometimes as 18 and sometimes as 21.

"If you convict the defendant you must accept the testimony of Miss Satterlee herself," Giesler said.

The jury was expected to get the case tomorrow.

Woman Claims Cafe Kept Her Waiting 8½ Hours

A Takoma matron stormed into the office of the corporation counsel in Municipal Court yesterday and demanded her rights as a citizen, to be served in a restaurant which she alleges kept her sitting at a table from 12:30 p. m. Sunday until 9 o'clock the same night and totally ignored her.

Hunger, she said, finally drove her in desperation out of the place to seek sustenance.

Mrs. Mabel Heibert, who lives at 912 Carroll Avenue, Takoma Park, Md., told reporters the estaurant management didn't like her. It objected, she said, to her throwing spoons on the floor which she considered not washed properly, and there were times, she said, when the same thing would happen to the ash trays and for the same reasons . . . the restaurant, she said, didn't like this.

When asked why she didn't change to a restaurant more willing to serve her she explained: "It's not because of the cocktails I go there, because I never drink . . . the food is average, I could find as good in other places . . . but, ah the music, it's lovely."

Uruguayan Reporters Praise U. S. Attitude

San Francisco, Feb. 4 (AP).—Seven Uruguayan newspapermen on a six-week tour of the United States, said today they were greatly impressed with the terrific pace of America's war industry, and most of all, the exuberant, victorious attitude of the American people themselves.

"This country sweats war," said Dr. Eduardo Larretta, coordinator of the newspaper El Pais of Montevideo.

If You Get Up Nights You Can't Feel Right

If you have to get up 3 or more times a night your rest is broken and it's no wonder if you feel old and run down before your time. Functional rather than organic or systemic Kidney and Bladder trouble often may be the cause of many pains and symptoms simply because the Kidneys may be tired and not working fast enough in filtering and removing irritating excess acids, poisons and wastes from your blood. So if you get up nights or suffer from burning, scanty or frequent passages, leg pains, backache, or swollen ankles, due to non-organic or non-systemic Kidney and Bladder troubles, you'll make no mistake in trying the prescription called Cystex. Because it has given such joyous, happy relief in so high a percentage of such cases, Cystex is sold under a guarantee of money back on return of empty package unless completely satisfactory. Cystex costs only 35c at druggists.

Asthma Mucus Loosened & Sound Sleep Promoted First Night

For Thousands of Sufferers

Choking, gasping, wheezing, recurring attacks of Bronchial Asthma ruin your sleep and rob your blood of vitally important oxygen because you can't get air in and out of your lungs properly. But now it is no longer necessary to suffer from these terrible attacks without the benefit you may receive from a physician's prescription called Mendaco. Within a very short time after the first dose, Mendaco ingredients start circulating thru the blood, thus reaching the smallest as well as the largest Bronchial tubes where they usually quickly help liquefy, loosen and remove thick strangling mucus (phlegm), thereby promoting freer breathing and more restful sleep. In fact, Mendaco has proved so successful in helping thousands of sufferers from recurring spasms of Bronchial Asthma that it is sold under a guarantee of money back, unless completely satisfactory. So get Mendaco from your druggist today.

Ringside Table

With Mary Harris

A GIRLISH GALAXY of stars is making the Casino Royal positively incandescent these nights. Helen Lane plays the steel guitar with a vim, finish and unusual phrasing that makes the average male guitarist seem—well, comparisons are odious as the maxim maker said. As if this wasn't enough, Helen is also extremely beautiful and uses her eyes in Betty Boopish fashion . . . Eileen George, mistress of ceremonies, is pouring her rich contralto over "Can't Get Outa This Mood" . . . And those ineffable Dancing Redheads are doing a Gay 90's number to end all Gay 90's numbers. They portray Bowery girls, burlesque queens, society ladies and one garishly lovely creature who parades to the strains of "Frankie and Johnny."

Tony Pastor, now at the Victory Room, was once the entire sax section of Artie Shaw's band—in the days when the Shaw band had only one saxist.

TREASURE ISLAND ECHOES. The alternating and highly contrasting dance rhythms of Paul Kain's and Ovando's bands give a dramatic fervor to Treasure Island diversion. . . . Paul's orchestra is now playing for the P. J. Nee radio hour every afternoon at 5 via WJSV. . . . Carlos Campos, maraca and bongo drum man for Ovando's band, rescue a bus driver from asphyxiation during our recent spell of snow, sleet and what-have-you.

AFRICAN SUNTAN. Kay Francis and Mitzi Mayfair, both browner than Bali beauties, put in a surprise appearance in the Mayflower Lounge the other afternoon. They acted as mysterious as a pair of Mona Lisas, but the story kept circulating that they were just in from North Africa. Those suntans looked too dark for California or Florida.

Maestro Milton Davis of the Rainbow Rooom has turned down an offer to take his band into one of the country's most prominent spots. (Sorry, can't tell you its name.) After eight years Milt is indissolubly wedded to the Rainbow Room.

OSCAR OF THE HI HAT and his sweet little missus celebrated their nineteenth wedding anniversary last Sunday with a trip to the "Ice-Capades" and a dinner party in the Neptune Room, where Maestro Dave Roberts dressed up Oscar's pet tune, "My Hero," with innumerable fascinating swing trimmin's.

OF ENTERTAINMENT ACES. Owen and Parker, now in their eleventh week at Paul Young's, are grads of the University og Syracuse, which blushingly disclaims credit for their current songs . . . Jimmy Bright, new drummer with Pete Macias' band at the Lounge Riviera, is also a composer and used to dance in vaudeville . . . Little Jack Little, whose rare pianistics have packed El Patio for months, is given credit by professionals for first establishing the great popularity of the Hawaiian Room in Manhattan's Lexington Hotel . . . Fred and Ann Carroll, now at the Lotus, transform themselves into perfect replicas of movie stars without using a mite of make-up. We wouldn't spoil the trick for you by telling how it's done . . . Bandleader Ralph Hawkins of Crossroads, is more than an ace swing maestro. Watch him on that bandstand for a perfect demonstration of showmanship. He rates a break in the celluloids . . . Dancers Yourloff and Yoder of the Balalaika, are perfection in two persons in all performances. Currently they're doing a rollicking Ukrainian folk dance . . . Pepito, Puerto Rican singer with Jose Morand's Band in the Cosmos Room, has a gilded fan following among Pan-American diplomats . . . Singer Kay Hunt of Alan Holmes' Band in the Metronome Room, is one of the prides of Sigma Chi Sorority.

Cynda Glenn, chic singing comedienne, had her baby piano rolled into the Troika last evening, created spasms of hilarity with her dainty rascality.

A POT POURRI OF PARTIES is always going on at Burt's Trans-Lux. Lately they had a FBI dinner, a shower party for a baby, a Masonic party, an Eastern Star luncheon and a farewell party for a new WAVE—all on the same day.

SUPERNATURALISTS. Leo, the handsome elderly seer of Mayfair played Orinental roles in the silent movies . . . Roberta of Restaurant "400" has given readings for such contrasted characters as Col. James Roosevelt, Nancy Carroll and Noah Beery . . . Zooe of Cafe Caprice was born in Greece.

PALATE TICKLERS. The "silver kraut' at Olmsted's. It's fulla vitamins, too . . . Chicken livers with water chestnuts and pineapple at Ruby Foo's . . . Grilled oysters in the Dubonnet Room. They have that wonderful tang o' the Chesapeake. The queen of soups is certainly petite marmite as served in the neater tricks of the Broadmoor chef.

called the "laugh factory of the southeast." The new emcee is Jack Griffin, abetted by that "ton of fun," Louis Potter . . . You'll see all the Gayety Theater stars at the midnight fiesta at the Gay 90's . . . In Georgetown you'll find Jack Neal's Band creating high pressure rhythm at the Louisiana . . . Over northeast there'll be a crowd trying to get into Kavakos' Grill . . . Washie Bratcher's Band will be sounding off for hundreds of young folks at the Washington Hotel.

Reporter Spends Last Hours With Doomed Man

By the Associated Press

Salt Lake City, Feb. 4.—A newspaper reporter and a condemned slayer sat in death row at the Utah prison tonight, waiting out the last hours before the murderer of a police detective goes before a sheriff's firing squad at sunrise.

Walter Robert Avery, 34, former marine who fought Nicaraguan revolutionaries in 1928-29, and who on February 11, 1941, shot to death Hoyt L. Gates, Ogden, Utah, detective, in a grocery store hold-up, asked that T. R. Johnson, Ogden staff correspondent for the Salt Lake Tribune, spend the last night with him.

Johnson formerly was a bishop in the Latter Day Saints (Mormon) Church.

Avery today turned over to a newspaper reporter a 10-page "autobiography" he had written in the death cell.

"Death to me is simply the cashing in of the stack of chips all of us receive at birth and while I have lost heavily in the game of life, I intend to face the cashier a good loser," he said in this document.

"Each of us has this pile of chips to start life with.

"At first, when I hit a streak of tough going, I tried cheating and this pulled me out of several scrapes. This became a regular stock in trade with me in my game of life, but finally I reached the place where all my marked cards were recognized, all my tricks discovered and the game was practically over for me."

As dawn approaches Avery will be brought from his cell hooded, and led to an arm chair in a corner of the prison yard, where he will be strapped in and a target placed over his heart.

Five men—volunteers paid $25 each—will be armed with rifles, one of which will be loaded with a blank cartridge, and will fire on the order of Sheriff John R. Watson of Weber County.

CAN'T KEEP GRANDMA IN HER CHAIR
She's as Lively as a Youngster—Now her Backache is better
Many sufferers relieve nagging backache quickly, once they discover that the real cause of their trouble may be tired kidneys.
The kidneys are Nature's chief way of taking the excess acids and waste out of the blood. They help most people pass about 3 pints a day.
When disorder of kidney function permits poisonous matter to remain in your blood, it may cause nagging backache, rheumatic pains, leg pains, loss of pep and energy, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes, headaches and dizziness. Frequent or scanty passages with smarting and burning sometimes shows there is something wrong with your kidneys or bladder.
Don't wait! Ask your druggist for Doan's Pills, used successfully by millions for over 40 years. They give happy relief and will help the 15 miles of kidney tubes flush out poisonous waste from your blood. Get Doan's Pills.

Draft Edict Brings Flood Of Job Seekers

By the Associated Press

By the hundreds of thousands, men of draft age are already seeking war work, a survey indicated yesterday, as a result of the War Manpower Commission's warning that beginning April 1 dependents will be no cause for deferment of those in certain nonessential occupations.

In New York City, applications with the United States Employment Service for war jobs jumped to 29,802 Wednesday, the day after the warning, compared with 8000 daily before then. The rush continued yesterday with 13,493 interviewed.

The Philadelphia office of the service reported 500 telephone inquiries an hour. Applications were up 50 per cent in Omaha, 35 per cent in Chicago and 30 per cent in Des Moines.

U. D. C. Offices Flooded

In Washington, whose workers fall largely into two classes, those in the Government and those in service industries, officials of the employment service were considering putting on special evening shifts of interviewers. More than 600 had appeared at the offices, they said, and 2000 had telephoned.

Some population centers already heavily engaged in war work reported only mild interest. Baltimore war plants said there was a flurry of applications Wednesday but it quieted down and similar advices came from the employment service.

Little Interest

Birmingham officials said there had been scarcely any reaction from the draft warning but that an advertisement of free training for war work had brought large numbers of applicants. From New Orleans came a report of "surprisingly little interest."

In issuing the warning, the Manpower Commission said 3,200,000 transfers from nonessential occupations to war work must be made in 1943.

Officials said yesterday that many men were asking whether they would have to leave their home city in order to get into jobs which will defer them if they have dependents. They are being told that for the present they will not have to move.

Another question was whether the draft quotas would be raised in cities having large numbers of men in nondeferable jobs. The answer to this is no, officials said.

The Associated Press survey indicated that in many cases the inquirers at employment offices were uncertain and confused. Some offices said they had received no official advices of the order.

Further Cut In U. S. Candy Ration Forecast

Chicago, Feb. 4 (AP).—A further cut in the candy available for civilians—unless they work in war plants—was forecast today by the National Confectioners' Association.

"In accordance with the suggestions of Government officials, wholesalers and jobbers are being requested to divert a still larger portion of their very limited candy supply to defense plants," the association said.

"Government officials feel that to the extent materials are available to candy manufacturers," the association added, "they should be incorporated to a greater extent than customary in candies which can be sold in 5, 10 and 25 cent unit packages."

House Caucus Approves Return Of 4 to D. C. Group

The House Democratic caucus yesterday approved the return of four veteran members to the House District Committee at a session which saw several Congressmen take the floor to stress the need of a seasoned and hard-working group to handle wartime Washington affairs.

Representative Mahon (Texas) and Nichols (Oklahoma) reminded the caucus of the careful attention that must be paid to local affairs, and spoke of the need for a well-staffed committee.

Chairman Randolph later pointed out that the caucus action would provide a "seasoned committee" for the first time in history, in contrast with the usual practice of filling its ranks with new men. The return of the four veterans—D'Alesandro (Maryland), Harris (Arkansas), Hebert (Louisiana) and Russell (Texas)—will mean that 10 of the committee's 21 members have served on the group before.

With the committee roster now completed, Randolph indicated that he would call an organization meeting of the committee next week.

More Members Of M.R.A. Lose Deferment Pleas

New York, Feb. 4 (AP).—The appeals of Henry Wilfred (Bunny) Austin, former British Davis Cup tennis star, and 14 other members of the Moral Rearmament Movement who sought draft deferment on the grounds that their M. R. A. duties were essential to the war effort were denied today by appeals board No. 4.

The appeals board, of which Charles H. Tuttle, former United States District Attorney, is chairman, declared that the work of the Moral Rearmament Movement was not "necessary" to the war production program, and also cited the "work or fight" order issued by the War Manpower Commission in continuing the men in the 1-A classification.

Of an original group of 28 M. R. A. members who were classified in 1-A by local board 17 here, nine members previously had lost their appeals and another was inducted into the Army. Three others have not yet filed appeals.

Nazi-Uniformed Students Fail To Create Stir

Bedecked in the uniforms and glittering braid of high-ranking Nazi naval officers, two youthful college students yesterday paraded the streets of war-crowded Washington without a single question being asked of them.

The youths, John F. Quinn, 19, of Newark, N. J., and Peter Landsberg, 20, of Rio de Janeiro, rented the uniforms from a local costumer. The ranks were captain and commander. Starting out from the school, they took a taxi to the State Department Building. Walked past the White House down to Fifteenth Street to F and then went to a movie.

After the show, the students took a taxi and returned to college.

"We had a lot of fun but it was not as exciting as we thought it would be," Quinn said. "Wherever we were saluted, we returned the salute. We didn't think we could get away with it right here in Washington, but we did!"

Land Reports Progress on Oil Barge Program

Admiral Emory S. Land, chairman of the United States Maritime Commission, last night reported "good progress" on the oil barge construction program and revealed that both concrete and wooden barges will be in operation "very soon." Anticipated benefits from their use in bringing additional oil East depend, however, on increasing war needs, he said.

Admiral Land's information was passed along in the form of answers to queries posed by four newspaperwomen during the nineteenth edition of "The Nation's Press Women Speak," a radio program broadcast over WOL. The interviews were Christine Sadler, Sunday editor of The Post and president of the Women's National Press Club; Helene Morse, of Newsweek; Lorraine Francis of the Los Angeles Times, and Isabel Kennear Griffin of the Washington bureau of the Hartford (Conn.)) Times.

HOUSEHOLD'S RATE 2% PER MONTH ON ALL LOANS
Here are two good rules. 1. Don't borrow unless you must. 2. If you do borrow, get your loan at the lowest rate you can. Household's rate is 2% per month on the unpaid balances. Total cost of $50 loan, repaid in six monthly installments, only $3.58. Many other plans. No endorsers required. No credit inquiries of friends. If a loan is the answer to your problem, phone or visit us.

The Gallup Poll

Close Presidential Election Likely in 1944, Analysis of Congressional Trends Indicates

By George Gallup

Director, American Institute of Public Opinion

Princeton, N. J., Feb. 4.—If the 1942 congressional election can be taken as a fair indication of party strength, the presidential race next year will be an extremely close affair unless there is a marked shift in party sentiment.

Official returns in last November's congressional election have just become available for most of the States. These results, after making allowance for the relation between the vote for Congress and the vote for President, using the relationship established in 1940, would indicate an electoral vote line-up today having all the elements of a horse race. It is as follows:

Republicans . 290 electoral votes
Democrats . 241 electoral votes

It takes 266 to elect.

The slight Republican advantage is a precarious one, however, because in a large bloc of States the Republicans are ahead by a very small margin.

Twenty-five States having 333 electoral votes, or more than 60 per cent of the total, show an indicated Republican or Democratic margin of less than 5 percentage points from the 50-50 mark. Nine of them show the Democrats having advantage by a margin of within 5 points, and 16 are Republican by a similarly close margin. A shift of a few per cent in favor of the Democrats would move a large bloc of electoral votes to the Democratic side.

These 25 States clearly constitute the political battleground for 1944.

It is to be expected, of course, that the difference between the vote for Congressmen and the vote for President will fluctuate from election to election and it cannot therefore be assumed that the relationship established in 1940 will be duplicated exactly in 1944.

But an analysis which takes that relationship into account is likely to give a more realistic picture of the situation than one which does not.

That is because election results involving purely State and local offices, as well as Congressmen, sometimes give a misleading picture of party strength in presidential elections. For example, Illinois, Massachusetts and Ohio elected Republican governors and yet went Democratic in the presidential election. Michigan and Indiana, on the other hand, elected Democratic governors in 1940, but voted for Willkie for President.

Therefore, in the last column of the accompanying table, a percentage has been worked out for each State to indicate the presidential strength of the two parties on the basis of the 1940 differential between congressional vote and presidential vote. The differential is shown, and also the actual congressional vote in 1942.

Lana Turner Wins Custody Of Unborn Baby

Los Angeles, Feb. 4 (AP).—Lana Turner, her beauty a little dimmed but far from obscured by a heavy cold, went from a sickbed into court today and obtained an annulment of her marriage to Stephen Crane, together with custody of her unborn child.

The actress told Superior Judge Roy V. Rhodes that after she married Broker Crane last July 17 she learned his previous wife's divorce had not been made final. The former wife was Carol Ann Kurtz of Indianapolis, who married Crane in 1937.

Crane's divorce is now final, and asked if she intended to remarry him, the blonde actress said:

District Staff Marks USO's 2d Birthday

Staff workers of the United Service Organizations yesterday celebrated the second birthday anniversary of the USO at a luncheon at the Jewish Community Center, Sixteenth and Q Streets Northwest.

Francis J. Keppel, secretary of the Joint Army and Navy Committee on Welfare and Recreation, told the guests that "the average citizen has not yet fully realized the enormity of the services rendered by the USO.

"Now the organization is serving an average monthly attendance of 12 million enlisted men and war workers in 1200 clubs and smaller units," he said, "and although complete figures are never available on that vital part of the work, personal counseling and advice, it is certain that a minimum of 93,000 young people bring their personal problems each month to USO's professional workers for quiet talks."

Honor guests included Capt. John H. Simpson, special services officer for the Washington Military District; Lieut. W. D. Thompson, in charge of welfare and recreation for the Potomac River Naval Command; Edward Conover, Federal Security Agency representative for Washington; Grover Hartman, chairman of the defense committee of the District Federation of Churches; L. Joseph Cahn, executive secretary of the War Hospitality Committee; and Judge James P. B. Duffy, national representative of the USO.
